... but first a word from our editor

In this issue we again have an assortment of articles which should be of interest to our readers: The travelogue of a recent visit to Ostrowiec, Kunów, and Ożarów, with information on personal contacts and archival research; My experience of a recent research breakthrough on an 'impossible' family line, discovered in the extracts published in this issue of the Journal; Part II of a translation from the Zwoleń yizkor book (in eastern Radom gubernia), continued from the last issue, containing some personal reminiscences and lots of individual names; The translation of a well-researched article on the history of the Jewish settlement in Jędrzejów ("Yendjev"), with fascinating details on the reasons for the local migrations of the Jews in this region; and there's a bibliography on Polish-Jewish genealogical research - this list of books should be a handy reference to all the basic resources needed for your research.

The extracts of Jewish vital records from LDS microfilms in this issue are: birth records from the town of Szczekociny (western Kielce gubernia); more marriage records from Przedbórz (western Radom gubernia); and the completion of all microfilmed birth, marriage and death records from Daleszyce (eastern Kielce gubernia).

I would like to remind readers that the journals are put out entirely on a volunteer basis and that it is crucial that members continue to participate in this. We actively encourage the submission of articles for publication in the Journal, whether original material or translations of material. Of course, we also need members to continue to perform extractions of the Polish and Russian records that we publish in the journal.

The upcoming 20th International Conference on Jewish Genealogy in Slat Lake City this July would be a splendid opportunity for members to learn how to perform extractions on the specific towns that interest them the most. We hope to set up some informal tutorial sessions, where more experienced members would be available for advising novices on the reading and extraction of the Polish and Russian records, using the microfilms at the LDS Family History Library.

I'd also like to take this opportunity to remind people of Jewish Records Indexing-Poland's "Polish State Archives" project, to obtain indexes of non-microfilmed Jewish vital records of the late 19th century. There are still no Archive Coordinators for the seven archives holding the Jewish vital records for towns in Kielce and Radom gubernias. No work will be done at an archive until someone volunteers to be the "Archive Coordinator" for that archive. See page 26 of the previous issue, and get in touch with JRI-PL to participate in this important endeavor.

We'd like to run another "Family Finder" in the last issue of this year. Please see page 31, and send the names of your ancestral surnames and associated towns to Mark Froimowitz.

Ostrowiec

The Witches Survived, the Jews Are Dead

by Harry Stein

In May of 1999, my wife and I visited Poland. The visit was for the primary purpose of finding genealogy information about my family. I also wanted an appreciation of the environment in which my people lived.

My mother and father were first cousins. My wife's Sephardic family was from Greece, so I was able to focus on only my family, the Brochsztajn family.

The center of the search was Ostrowiec Świętokrzyski. So you do not get tongue-tied trying to pronounce the name of the city, the town is phonetically recognizable currently throughout Poland as "Ostrovya", which is what my parents called it many, many years ago. Ostrowiec is located 84 kilometers southwest of Radom, about 180 kilometers south of Warsaw, on Highway 9. I also researched in two other towns in the vicinity of Ostrowiec. Ożarów, a small town about 22 kilometers to the southeast of Ostrowiec, and Kunów, an even smaller town, less than 15 kilometers to the northwest of Ostrowiec. This very narrow geographic and family focus helped in the research.

I will provide you with my itinerary. I will also provide you with the names of helpful organizations, hotels, and people who assisted me, not as an advertisement ploy, but simply as fact for those who may have a Polish visit on their agenda.

I contracted for the trip in the United States with ISRAM which has prepackaged Jewish heritage tours and also has the capability to customize a tour to one's specifications. We took a combination of both options. By far, the most important element of the trip, if you have a customized tour for research, is the guide. He or she can make or break the trip. We had a wonderful guide. (If you want his name and address, please email me at <SteinHE@aol.com>). I asked for three days in Kraków in a packaged tour, four days in Ostrowiec (customized to my research requirements), and three days in Warsaw, in that sequence.

In Kraków, I wanted to learn about basic Polish culture, which I did. In the Ostrowiec area, I wanted to learn about my people, which I did. In Warsaw, I wanted to get the big picture of Jewish history in Poland, past and present, which I did. It was a good plan.

In Kraków, we stayed at the Forum Hotel, adjacent to the Vistula River. From our room and breakfast dining room we had a panoramic view of the river and the city. Throughout Poland, the food was good and very inexpensive. We researched prior to ensure our all hotel accommodations were good and they were. The search was emotionally exhausting. Safe and clean accommodations were a necessity.

Kraków was the old capitol of Poland, so we visited the obligatory castle and the University of Kraków, the oldest university in Poland. I went to the Polish State Archives in Kraków. When I showed the clerk my letter of authorization from the headquarters of the Polish State Archives in Warsaw, I was ushered in and well treated. If you plan to visit a regional archive, write to Warsaw in advance, and ask for a letter of authorization. The regional archive in Kraków had a large reading room and at least one clerk who spoke English. I had no problem being understood.

Our next visit was to a salt mine in the town of Wieliczka, about 30 minutes out of Kraków. The mine employed Jewish workers, and during the concentration camp era workers were sent from nearby Auschwitz to work the mine. There were many memorial salt carvings engraved into the walls of the mine, one of which was included a memorial to the Jewish victims of the war.

We visited the remaining synagogue in Kraków. The interior had been stripped and used as a warehouse during the Nazi occupation. The building was somewhat restored so that services can be held. There is a small cemetery behind the synagogue in which the stones are readable. The custodian of the synagogue is a survivor of Schindler's list by the name of Jan Lieban. He also was an extra in the movie of the same name. I am sure Mr. Lieban would conduct a search and provide a translation of the stones if you provided funds for the synagogue. If you want his address, I can provide it. Write in Polish, he does not speak English.

The last stop, on the last day of our stay in Kraków was the concentration camp at Auschwitz. Being retired military and having seen the camp at Dachau, I thought I would be able to handle it well. However, three displays bothered me, and I can see the images to this day.

The first display was of human hair. I remembered seeing pictures of female inmates with shorn heads. The hair, turned gray with age, has remained on the floor for more than 50 years. The Nazis wove the hair into cloth. We saw a blanket woven from human hair. The blanket had been DNA tested to insure it was indeed human hair.

The second display was a huge pile of suitcases. Each inmates took a suitcase to the camp. Inmates names were painted on the sides of the suitcases. It is said that one returning survivor found his suitcase. Survivors do return in March of every year for a reunion.

The third memory was the row of small dark cells in which, I was told, housed mostly political prisoners waiting trial by the Nazi military court. Prisoners lived in these cells naked, and were taken out in the same condition and shot. The wall against which the prisoners were made to stand had almost crumbled from the impact of the bullets.

All of these sites displayed one common theme, the degradation of the human race by other members of the human race. In hindsight the perpetrators of these terrible crimes painted themselves as the subhumans they ascribed to their victims. They made maximum use of their victims. While alive, the Nazis worked their prisoners to the point of exhaustion. They used the hair, gold teeth, spectacles, and finally the ashes.

There were some encouraging sights. I saw tourists from many countries, including Germany, visit the site. There were groups of Polish school children also visiting the camp. Many Polish intellectuals, political and military leaders, and Russian prisoners of war found themselves prisoners in Auschwitz.

The Russians captured the third commandant of the camp and hung him in Auschwitz.

For genealogists, or for survivor seekers, the camp also had a research activity. I submitted a request for my family, as I did for my wife's family. The Nazis shipped Sephardim from Salonika by rail, through the Balkans to Auschwitz. Within three weeks after our visit, we received responses. There was no record of the names we had submitted. While the Nazis kept good records of what they had done, they destroyed many of those records in the face of the Russian advance through Poland.

Ostrowiec is an industrial town with a population of more than 50,000 people. If you stay at the Forum Hotel, Lysica, you can see the old foundry that was the center of industry for the town. There is now a new foundry. If you look out of a window at the rear of the hotel, you will see the dark mountains where the witches, according to local folklore, live. The old foundry still stands. The witches still persist. The Jewish community is gone.

A look at the public records held at the Urząd Stanu Cywilnego (USC) in Ostrowiec, Kunów and Ożarów tells the story. In all three cases, entries of Jewish births, marriages and deaths stop abruptly in 1942. Under the last entry in each cities' set of books was a thin red line indicating the end had come to the Jewish community.

Ostrowiec (Ostrovya), a town which appeared to be a busy and progressive town that digested most things western — every thing from Italian pizza, British toasts ('cheers') to American music. The town even has a web page. You can find it at <<http://free.polbox.pl/w/wojc/>>.<sup>1</sup> I attempted to contact by email, the president of the town, who also happened to be a member of the Polish Parliament, for a letter of introduction to ease my way. He did not respond. As it turned out I did not need the letter. Everyone was kind and cooperative.

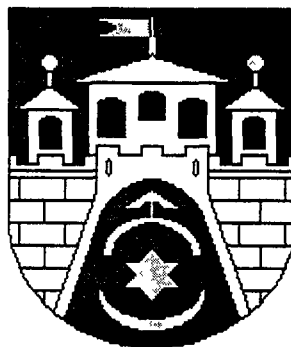

I was told by my guide that "many years ago Ostrovya was a Jewish town". There were more Jewish residents in the town than Catholics. Perhaps a ratio as high as 80% Jewish to 20% non-Jewish.<sup>2</sup> There was evidence to that on the web site as the city crest is depicted there as a town wall and a main gate beneath a watch tower. At the center of the gate entrance is a yellow Star of David.

On the same website, a graph shows a decline in the population in 1942 from about 35,000 to 18,000, with no explanation for the loss. The dramatic loss of population was of course, due to the loss of the Jewish population. My guide assured me that while the Christians lived on one side of town, and the Jews on the other side of town, there was neither a ghetto nor violence prior to the Nazi invasion. I found later that this was not true. There was civil strife prior to the Nazi invasion. It was caused by job competition at the local foundry.

My first research stop in Ostrowiec was at the bureau of vital statistics (USC) with whom I had been corresponding for three years. The individual with whom I had been conducting research had been very professional, and thorough. All the available Brocksztajn records had already been sent to me.

Many, if not all Polish communities maintained a "house census", which is a running inventory of the occupants of each house. The census contains names; dates and locations of births, marriages and deaths; relationships of the occupants, departure and immigration information; previous addresses and other items of interest such as military duty. In Ostrowiec, the house census was kept at the City Hall. I received these records because the USC official with whom I had been working had forwarded my requests to the appropriate city hall office. The members of that office had sent me the house census records.

I would encourage all those researching through the USC, to ask the USC representative to forward a request to the city repository that holds the house census. It's voluntary I suppose, but the Ostrowiec city government did it for me without cost. I will always be grateful to the city officials for the kind manner in which they handled my mail requests. They must have gone through each census sheet until they found the names I wanted. I had no house numbers to begin the search. These documents are a treasure. They contain information not found elsewhere, and unlike the other information kept in municipalities, the information is more than 100 years old.

The address on the census records were by house number rather than by street address. House number 105 for example, was not necessarily next to or even close to house number 104. In the smaller towns it is still possible to see the small square blue metal plates on the houses with the number and the surname of the occupant. I had one correlation of house address and house number due to research prior to my trip. The city hall personnel were unable to find any other correlation from the family house numbers to the street numbers. As luck would have it, the house number that I did have was directly across the street from city hall. I could see it from the window in the room in which I was doing research. House number 535 was Glogowski Street number 4. At this address lived my paternal grandfather, grandmother, and assorted aunts and uncles.

The only awkward moment during all of my family research came at this time. The clerk wanted to know if I planned to lay claim to the 5 houses I was looking for. My guide smoothed over any potential concerns by assuring the officials that I had no intent to claim the real-estate.

We next visited the Jewish cemetery. It was on the crown of a hill, as were most Jewish cemeteries in the area. There were approximately 50 stones standing upright. None of them were in their original position, I was told by my guide. The area of the original cemetery must have been much larger than it is currently, when one considers the large Jewish population of the town and that the cemetery was reputed to be in use for more than 200 years. The diameter of the current cemetery could be traversed on foot in five minutes. In addition to the stones standing in their entirety, there were two piles of rubble representing the stones that were brought back to cemetery in small pieces. There were also large fragments of stones inlaid in a concrete wall around one side of the cemetery, which served as a very thoughtful memorial. The tombstones, according to my guide, were used as paving stones by the Nazis. The stones were of sandstone so that they did not wear and weather well. I brought pre-war pictures of five stones I had, but could not make a match. The cemetery was well kept.

The synagogue building in Ostrowiec was still standing. It had been redesigned into a movie theater. The building was set in from the corner, so that it had sufficient horse wagon parking when it was a synagogue and vehicular traffic when it served as a theater. It was a tall, two story, rectangular building painted an orange/gold. The interior of the building was being remodeled for still another purpose, so I was unable to enter. There was no exterior clue that the building had once been a synagogue.

Next site Kunów. I introduced myself to the individual in charge of the USC in Kunów. I had been working with her by mail for several years. The first thing she said was that I knew your uncle, Jamka (Yonkiel) Brochsztajn. She recounted that my uncle had given her grandfather a good paying job in his bakery. She also stated that the grandfather was given bread to take home so that there was enough to eat. She recalled also that Jamka had two beautiful daughters. I emphasize this point only because everyone in the town to whom we later talked, remembered the two beautiful daughters. In addition to Chana and Estera, Yonkiel also had three sons.

The Brochsztajn Residence

Jonkiel Brochsztajn

We went through the books to the inevitable red line. We had again received by mail all the Brochsztajn entries. This is where our guide took over. On his own, he found, the approximate locations of the Brochsztajn business and living quarters from the clerk. We went there. Kunów was still a shtetl.

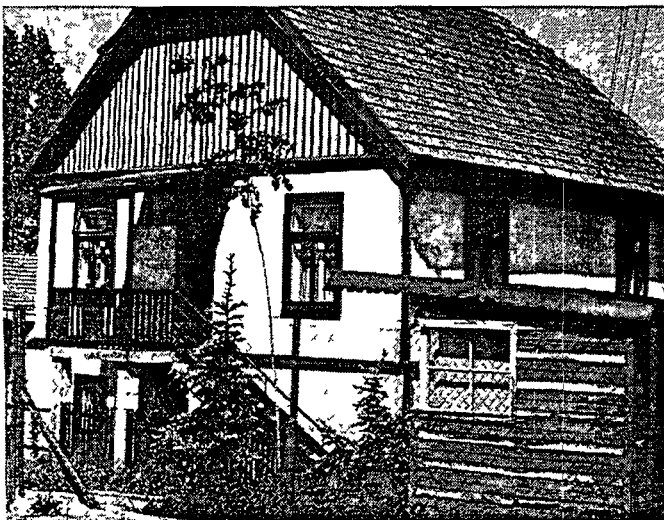

Picture a small town, with a square overgrown with grass and weeds, with the mandatory, nondescript statue, surrounded by wooden and stucco houses and you have the old area of Kunów where the Yonkiel Brochsztajn family lived.

Our guide stopped little old ladies in the vicinity of the square, and the current operators of the bakery. They were all eager to talk and they recalled the family - yes, they reminded us of the daughters.

The Retail Bakery

The Mazer House

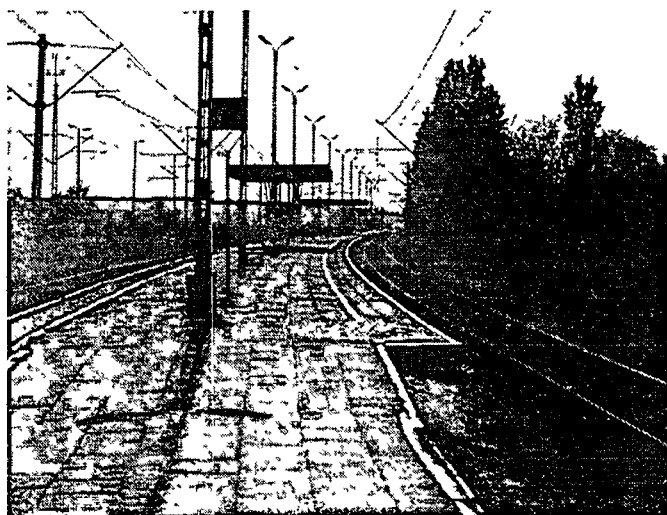

My uncle owned or rented three structures in the town. He rented the downstairs left, of the "Mazer" house where he installed an oven to bake his products. He also owned a residence and a retail bakery next to the square. The bakery was still used as a bakery. The residence and the bakery adjoined each other.

The old ladies of Kunów were willing to talk about anything, including the day the Nazis came to march the Jews out of town. The old ladies were little girls then, but they saw it, and they remembered it... and they described it. The Jews were herded in to the village square and marched down the long road, perhaps three miles or more, to the railroad station. If any of the children cried during the march, the guards would swing them head first against the walls along the way. If there were no walls, they were shot dead.

We drove to the station. This was the location at which the Jews of Kunów were made to wait for their death train. My guide was concerned about taking many pictures of a railroad station so we left abruptly. Kunów hurt me more than any other site, because I had the faces, and locations and the descriptions of events in front of me.

The Railroad Station at Kunów

Ożarów was to the east of Ostrowiec and was the last of the three towns in which most of my people lived. Ożarów, for some reason, furnished many of the wives for the Brochsztajn men. Every once in a while I found a Brochsztajn who lived in Ostrowiec but a birth certificate could not be found in the holdings of Ostrowiec, my father for example. I soon found that many of the children were born in Ożarów, or wherever the mother had originally come from. Apparently, many wives went home to mama to have their babies.

I found 17 Brochsztajn records in Ożarów. All from the Canadian branch of my family whom I had discovered only months before. I followed the names to the end of the list, the red line. The last Brochsztajn entry was a boy born on 1 April 1941. I thought of the forced march in Kunów, and my thoughts turned to children's heads bashed against the walls. I had to leave. In Warsaw, I collected my thoughts and had the hotel stenographer write a letter to the Ożarów USC asking for the records, which I have yet to receive.

We next visited the Ożarów Jewish cemetery just off a country road south of town. Unlike the well groomed Catholic cemetery below it, the Jewish cemetery was overrun with weeds and trees. There also appeared to be an encroachment from a nearby farmer. It was difficult to find the cemetery. There were no signs, fences or gates visible. There was only a dirt road leading off the main road. Perhaps the cemetery was protected from vandals by its own anonymity. Most of the stones appeared to be in better condition than the stones of Ostrowiec. Many of them appeared readable. Under the darkness of the canopy formed by the trees and the slivers of ultra bright light it was difficult to take color photos. [In the Kielce-Radom SIG Journal II:4 (Autumn 1998), Dr. Norman L. Weinberg provides translations of the Ożarów tombstones]. I found no stones belonging to my family. We did not seek out the synagogue.

The thought of another deportation march under the Nazis made me very uncomfortable. We left for Warsaw.

Warsaw was used as a decompression chamber. We took advantage of the city to take more pleasant tours. We stayed at the Marriott Hotel. We went to dinner in the old Jewish quarter and listened to Klezmer music played by a group imported from Latvia. We saw the beginning of another Jewish community. There was an operating synagogue, a day care center, and Yiddish theater.

I came away with the impression that Ostrowiec was not the best place for a Jew to live even in the best of times. I can't imagine what it was like during the Nazi occupation. I was pleasantly surprised how well the Polish archive system had worked for me. Go back again? Never. Make claim for the real estate? Never. Forget? Never.

A Personal Research Breakthrough

by Warren Blatt

Even after twenty years of genealogical research, it's possible to have breakthroughs and new discoveries. This month I found records for an ancestral family that I thought I would never be able to find, in a place that I never expected them, thanks to extracts published in this issue of the Kielce-Radom SIG Journal.

My great-grandmother (from Chęciny) told me about her husband's family. Her husband was from a village near Chmielnik, and she said that her mother-in-law was Etel GDALKA, and thought that the GDALKA family was from "Lagif" (i.e. Łagów). She said that Etel's parents, her husband's maternal grandparents, were Mailech and Tzurul GDALKA. To this date I had never seen the surname GDALKA in any written record earlier than the 20th century, so I wasn't even sure that it was the original surname. I had never been able to verify the surname, and thought that I never would – as there are no existing records from Łagów – the town hall was completely destroyed during WWII. All the information that I had was strictly from oral tradition.

In hopes of finding some remote trace of the GDALKA family, I have been looking at records from towns surrounding Łagów. I used the JewishGen "LDS Microfilm Master" (see Kielce-Radom SIG Journal, 1:2, pages 9-11) to find towns located near Łagów which have existing Jewish vital records on microfilm. I then began going through those microfilms, extracting records, in hopes that the GDALKA family would show up. The records of Opatów (15 miles east of Łagów) seemed very promising, because during the 1850s, it appears that Łagów Jewish residents registered their vital events in the Opatów register. But there was no trace of the GDALKA family. There was a GDALEWICZ family in Opatów, but they appear to be unrelated to my GDALKA family. (If anyone is related to the GDALEWICZ family, let me know – I've got your whole family tree!).

I also extracted records from the nearby towns of Bogoria and Szydłów – but no GDALKAs.

Then, last month, I received from Dolores Ring a draft of the extracts of the Daleszyce vital records, which are published in this issue. As I was formatting the Daleszyce extracts for publication, lo and behold, the surname GDALKA jumped out at me!

There was the marriage record of Mailech and Tzurul GDALKA – my great-great-great-grandparents – in Daleszyce – a town that I had never heard of. Daleszyce ("Dalashitza") is located about 8 miles southeast of Kielce, about 1/3rd of the way to Łagów. The 1852 marriage record listed my g-g-g-grandfather's place of birth and residence as Raków, a town a few miles from Łagów. So there was a new town, a new avenue for research. Unfortunately, the Jewish vital records of Raków have apparently suffered the same fate as those of Łagów – none have survived. So much for tracing the paternal line.

Also found in the Daleszyce extracts was the 1860 marriage of Abram GDALKA. We knew from oral tradition that the family of Abram GDALKA was related to our GDALKAs, but we never knew how. It turns out that Abram was Meilech's brother.

Both GDALKA brothers, Meilach and Abram, married brides from small village of Wola Jachowa, located 4 miles northeast of Daleszyce (10 miles east of Kielce). According to Where Once We Walked, Wola Jachowa had a Jewish population of just 23 people in the early 20th century. It turns out that these two brides were also related – step-aunt and step-niece, in a complex family relationship, diagrammed on the following pages. Inter-family relationships like this were quite common among Jews in small towns and villages in Poland.

From that 1852 marriage record, I learned the maiden surname of my g-g-g-grandmother Tzirul (spelled "Cyrla" in Polish, because the Polish letter "c" is pronounced like the English letter combination "tz"). She was recorded as the daughter of Mosiek and Etel Szapsowiczow, and her surname was SANKOWICZ – a new ancestral surname for me. So I began looking through the rest of the Daleszyce extracts, and published extracts of records for other nearby towns, for the surname SANKOWICZ. The 1826-1846 Daleszyce extracts were published in

II:2 (Spring 1998), pages 44-51. In the earlier Daleszyce extracts, I found Cyrla's 1825 birth registration. Then looking carefully through all of the Daleszyce extracts, and microfilmed records of the neighboring town of Chęciny, for anyone from the village of Wola Jachowa, or anyone named "Etel Szapsowicz", I made some surprising discoveries... the birth, marriage and death records of Cyrla SANKOWICZ's siblings... but under many different surnames. Here is a summary of the records that I found for her proported siblings:

Daleszyce 1819 B #98	Herszel	son of Jakob Sankowicz @30 & Etela Januow @26	Górno

Some discrepancies are immediately apparent. The surnames and given names vary from record to record. Surnames with varying spellings are the norm in Polish records, so that was nothing unusual. But the variations in the parents' given names were more troubling.

Firstly, the father's given name is sometimes Mosiek, sometimes Jakob. My first thought was that these were two different individuals, since they had two different names. But closer examination of these records as a group led me to believe that these are one and the same person. Both always had the same approximate age, both always had a wife with the same name, both had the same occupation. I conclude that the father had a "double name", i.e. "Moszek Jakob", and that one of his names was used in some records, and the other name used in other records. I'd seen this behaviour before, but not to such a degree that no single record contained the full double name.

The second discrepancy was that of Etel's surname. Sometimes she is "Szapszowicz", sometimes "Janusow". As in many Polish vital records, it is often difficult to distinguish between a patronymic and a genuine surname. After examining all of these records, my conclusion is that "Janusow" was her patronymic (i.e. her father's given name was "Janas". "Janas" is a Polish version of the Yiddish name Yoyna (spelled "Jojne" in Polish), i.e. Jonah); and "Szapsiowicz" was her maiden surname (or more accurately, the surname that her relatives later took, she personally never had that surname, since she married before the surname mandate took effect).

Another fluke was the 1829 birth registered under the surname "FAYGENBAUM". I ignored it at first, but it caught my eye because the parents' names and ages matched, as did the locale: the tiny village of Wola Jachowa. An inspection of the original record revealed that one of the witnesses was named FAYGENBAUM. The clerk must have erroneously assigned that surname to the father (and hence the child) in that record. Everything else in that record matches. One more reason to not rely on the index, but to examine every record carefully, looking at given names, ages, occupations, etc.

The hunch that all of these records were for siblings was confirmed when I located the death registrations of both parents in the Chęciny vital records:

Chęciny 1848 D #78	Moszek SZYMKOWICZ @60	son of Sandl? & Mindla leaving wife Etlā; children: Abram, Hercyk, Icyk, Jojne, Pinkus, Gitla, Cyrla.
Chęciny 1860 D #88	Etlā SANKOWICZ @82	dau of Janas & Laia children: Gitla 45, Cyrla 27, Hercyk 41, Icyk 36, Janas 31.

All of the children's names and ages correlate. Even though the birth and marriage records for some of these children listed their father's given name as Jakob, some as Moszek; in Moszek's and Etl's death registrations, all of these children are listed.

Further exploration of the early Daleszyce extracts, again looking only for matching parents' given names, yield probable siblings of Etl: children of Jakob/Janas and Laia, from the village of Górnó, listed below. Because of their patronymics, I can add one more generation.

Daleszyce 1811/2 B #34	Siapsia	son of Jakob Siapsiowicz @40 & Laia Rubinowicz @30	Górnó
Daleszyce 1817 M #1	Malka Janasowna @20	dau of Janas Szabsiowicz & Laia Rubinowicz	Górnó
Daleszyce 1824 M #1	Haia Szapsiowicz @18?	dau of Jakob Szapsi & Laia Rubinow	Górnó

Lessons learned

So what can others learn from my experience? Several things:

- You will find records of your ancestors where you least expect them. I found the marriage registration of my elusive ancestors in Daleszyce, where I never would have expected it. Search the records of neighboring towns, in outward concentric circles, since most often marriages occurred between people from neighboring towns, typically between 5 and 20 miles. This is the true value of our SIG: cooperative locality-based research
- The value of full extracts, of being able to see all the fields at once, to find elusive connections, based on matching criteria other than surname. Research based on surnames alone is not enough, especially in early 19th century, when surnames were not used or not yet fixed.

- Surnames were highly variable. Even Datch-Mokotoff Soundex won't find some of the variations. You have to study the extracts, event by event, looking for events that look right: matching given names, ages, occupations, village names, etc.

The Jewish Settlement in Jędrzejów before 1914 (Part I)

"Osadnictwo Żydów w Jędrzejów do 1914 roku [cz. I]"

An article from Biuletyn Żydowskiego Instytutu Historycznego w Polsce

Translated from the Polish by Gordon McDaniel

Edited by Warren Blatt

The present article concerns the settlement of Jews in a small townlet which, from the moment of its origin until 1862, forbade Jews from living within its wall, on the basis of law and possession of the privilege de non tolerandis Judaeis.

The fate of the Jews of Jędrzejów demonstrates many similarities to that of Jews in the neighboring Miechów, Bodzentyn and Kielce. There likewise, the lowering of legal barriers and an intensive influx of Jews changed the character of the towns, which at the turn of the 20th century became Polish-Jewish towns.

In the middle of the 19th century there were about 90 towns in the Kingdom of Poland, or about 20% of the total, possessing the privilege de non tolerandis Judaeis, which forbade Jews from settling and residing within town boundaries.<sup>1</sup> The emancipation proclamation of Aleksander Wielopolski in 1862, which removed legal restrictions from the Jews,<sup>2</sup> opened new directions of settlement for that religious group. There began a half century of Jewish influx into settlements<sup>3</sup> that presented new possibilities and sources of work, that opened new perspectives and were attractive, no longer forbidden fruit. Migration of Jews into places dominated by Poles evoked in them not only hope, and the chance of a rapid career and advancement, but also insecurity, anxiety, sometimes fear and completely new problems, all of which were presented to the newcomers. The decision to leave their earlier settlements, abandon ancestral villages and a familiar environment was therefore surrounded by risk. The first Jewish settlers that came to places formerly having the privilege de non tolerandis Judaeis had to demonstrate a particular kind of determination and strength of will, overcoming difficulties and barriers, to conquer with the effort appropriate to the pioneers of settlement. How much easier a task was had by those who made their way on routes already blazed. As the years passed, the Jewish newcomers put down roots in the new settlements and tied themselves permanently to places that, in changing their form, became the "small fatherland" of two peoples, Polish and Jewish.

During the first half of the 19th century, exclusively Christian population lived in Jędrzejów. The privilege de non tolerandis Judaeis<sup>4</sup> obtained by the town was connected with the character of ownership of the town (it was once a town belonging to the Church), as well as the legal limitations against the Jews that were obligatory in the Kingdom of Poland, eliminated any possibility for Jews to live in that town. It is not surprising that, in the 1827 census for the town, given in statistical tables published by the Ministry of Internal Affairs in 1840, as well as in the tables for 1850, there was not one single Jewish resident.<sup>5</sup>

The first indications of Jews in Jędrzejów date to the late 1850s and early 1860s. No list of residents of the village in 1862 indicates a single Jew out of the 1,970 residents,<sup>6</sup> while we know from other sources that, in the period preceding emancipation, there were several Jewish families living in Jędrzejów, on the basis of individual permission. Which Jewish family was the first to settle in Jędrzejów, and when, is difficult to determine. It must have been in the mid-1850s. From press reports it would appear that the first Jewish residents in Jędrzejów were: Moszek Pepek, from the butcher shop, where he appears as a kosher butcher; Berek Wyplosz, paver; and Gitla Szprincwaser, who, under the rubric of profession, appears as either “liwerantka” or “tripe-seller”.<sup>7</sup> Besides the above-mentioned individuals, one should add Lejbus Berger, who, as it was written in 1864, “of many years (residence in Jędrzejów) as the owner of a store”.<sup>8</sup> It is difficult to determine what motives drove the town government, in the period before emancipation, to allow “exceptional” Jews to reside in the town. One can only suppose that it was the result of the efforts of those most interested, as well as the payments made by the Jews which were profitable to the residents of Jędrzejów. Problems typical of small towns were connected to increasing the budget and income of the towns, with renovation of old and laying out of new streets and town squares with profitable leases as part of the trade functions of Jędrzejów, provided the bases on which, by means of special “administrative permission” Jews were allowed in small towns to bid on leases for dispensing alcohol, for paving streets, for butcher shops, for taprooms and other “artisan” occupations. The decision to allow Jews to reside in Jędrzejów was made also in view of the specific structure of the occupations of Christians, of whom, in the middle of the 1860s, 54% were engaged in agriculture,<sup>9</sup> so that the “burning issue” of local governments was the constant absence of “qualified” artisans, businessmen, “industrialists”, who would operate “liwerantów”* and shops, or who would otherwise increase the income of the local treasuries through leases.

The interest of the Jews in Jędrzejów as a migration destination grew greatly when the legal barriers were lowered. The influx of Jews into the town was disturbed, however, by the political events of 1863-1864, which did not completely stop settlement in the new town, which played a significant role in the partisan battles of the January Uprising.<sup>10</sup> Nevertheless, in 1863, besides the five Jewish families already mentioned, there appeared new Jewish settlers, an unnamed “merchant”, baker and a letter deliverer.<sup>11</sup> A petition of the Jewish residents already in Jędrzejów, dated 27 May 1864, and sent to the military head of Kielce District, carried the signature of eight Jews who, as they stated, were like L. Berger and “not long time residents of the town of Jędrzejów, only since the time of emancipation”.<sup>12</sup> Among them were Jozek Chęciński, Moszek Tanenbaum, Nusym Nachemia, Słama Epstein, Jozek Bojman and Abeka Tanenbaum.

Alexander Harkavy’s Yiddish-English-Hebrew Dictionary (New York, 1928), p. 275, defines the Yiddish word “liverant” as “contractor, horse-dealer”. Another opinion is that it means “supplier to the military”, derived from the German verb “liefern”, meaning “to supply, furnish, distribute”. Ed.]

Somewhat different information about the first Jewish settlers in Jędrzejów is offered in memoirs written years later by residents Zejw Abramowicz and Icchak Abrahami. The differences relate not only to the numbers of settlers, but even their names. Among the first settlers named by the authors of the memoirs were, among others: Mosze Wajsberg with his family, who acted as tax collector (perhaps we are dealing here with the messenger mentioned above); Mordechaj Akiba Sobkowski, barber and hospital attendant; Alter Jechiel Chęciński, butcher; and Menasze Mojer, killed by the rebels in the Uprising of 1863.<sup>13</sup> Some other names are given in the memoirs of Menachem Mendel Horowitz, a later resident of Jędrzejów, who lists the first Jewish settlers in Jędrzejów as: Motl Isakow; Szmerl Szenkier (Baumart); Jome, or as he was called "Żółty Jome (Yellow Jome)", or Benjamin Goldberg; Jona Ajzenberg, called "Kaczka (Duck)", and the brothers Ahron and Hersz Sankiewicz, who came from Chęciny.<sup>14</sup> The divergence in the names of the first Jewish settlers in Jędrzejów in the period of emancipation is rather significant. The most reliable would be those in archival sources, which however are not complete. It is even more difficult to establish the correct sequence of Jews arriving in Jędrzejów because in the traditions and customs of small-town societies, whether Jewish or Polish, there functioned a current system of names, nicknames and adopted name, which were frequently imposed randomly and far from the original surname. "Żółty", "Kaczka", "Kulawy", "Chęciński", "Sobkowski", etc., were by-names and appellations which displaced original surnames and Jewish names given in metrical books to such an extent that, in time, the latter were no longer used, so that in collective memory and later usage the former names had become fixed.

Regardless, however, of the variety of surnames and individuals recognized as pioneers of Jewish settlement in Jędrzejów, the authors of memoirs as well as source material confirm the fact that the number of Jews in the early period did not exceed ten adult males, which, importantly, made it impossible to carry out communal prayers, according to Jewish law. Probably there resided in Jędrzejów in the last half of the 1860s more than ten families, which provided the basis for organizing a religious community in the town. In a report on the socioeconomic situation of the gubernia, issued by the gubernia government in 1867, one reads that in Jędrzejów – now listed in the third category of town in the Kingdom of Poland, and numbering 248 houses, of which only 56 were of brick – there were 2,156 residents, 57 Jewish.<sup>15</sup> Jews were 2.6% of the population.

The increasing eagerness of Jews during the second half of the 1860s to settle in Jędrzejów arose not only from economic reasons, but also social, among which was the promotion of the town, on the basis of the administrative reform of the Kingdom of Poland in 1866, to the rank of capital of a district,<sup>16</sup> which included within its borders four towns (Jędrzejów, Małogoszcz, Sobków, Wodzisław) and about 270 village settlements with a total of about 50,000 residents.<sup>17</sup> With a constant stream of locating offices of the district administration, courts, police, schools, banks, etc.<sup>18</sup>, the town became a much more attractive destination for Jewish migration. With the influx of bureaucrat and the building of administrative structures the demand grew for consumer products, goods and articles of handicrafts, consumption or exchange of goods grew, all the more because Jędrzejów was famed for years as the trading center of the local market, known generally for its twice-annual eight-day fairs for horses and agricultural products.<sup>19</sup> So Jews came to Jędrzejów from near and distant areas, so we have surnames such as "Chęcinski", "Chmielnicki", "Słomnicki", "Sobkowski", "Działośzycki", "Wodzisławski", which give perfect indications of the migration and territorial mobility of the Jews of Jędrzejów.<sup>20</sup>

The strengthened position of Jędrzejów in the local network of the region, and the growing importance of the town in economic, political and administrative life was, however, impaired by local reform, which like the administrative reform of 1866 was occasioned by political issues. Two years after the administrative reorganization of the Kingdom of Poland, there was another local reform, this time harmful to Jędrzejów, in which, on the basis of an edict from the Czar dated 13 June 1869, 34 towns in Kielce Gubernia were deprived of their local laws, reducing them to the category of village; all four towns in the Jędrzejów district suffered this fate.<sup>21</sup> For six centuries, Jędrzejów had enjoyed local rights given in 1271, while now in place of the liquidated magistrate's office there was appointed a communal office in which only those residents who had at least three morga [one morga = 5600 sq. m.] of land had the right to vote.<sup>22</sup> The degradation of the town to the rank of village thus did away with voting rights in communal affairs for the majority of the residents, including all Jews.

In social prestige, great pain from the reform was felt by the category known as obywateł ("citizen"), who had been connected for generations with the town and its fate. Residents of Jędrzejów, generally attaching significance to their social origins and glorying in their past,<sup>23</sup> were proud of the fact that within the walls of their town once upon a time the Bishop of Kraków himself, the first Polish chronicler, Wincenty Kadlubek<sup>24</sup> reluctantly came to the decision to make himself equal to them, placing himself in municipal laws at a level even lower than a peasant. A completely similar stance was taken by the Jewish community of the town, all the more, since, as stated in the report of the Governor of Kielce Gubernia in relating the reception of the local reform among residents of small towns, in general "the Jewish population received the reform with disbelief and distrust".<sup>25</sup> The dissatisfaction of the residents of Jędrzejów was confirmed by the many years of endeavors made in municipal councils directed toward reversing the offending statutes. For almost ten years the problem of returning local rights to the settlement was raised unsuccessfully at municipal meetings in Jędrzejów, passing on those occasions appropriate resolutions.

The local reform of 1869, no matter how much it weakened the position of Jędrzejów in removing from it local rights until 1916, nevertheless did not fundamentally change the course of migration or the tempo of the influx of Jews. In Jędrzejów the percentage of Jewish population grew systematically, which led to a reorganization of the synagogal districts in the District of Jędrzejów. While in 1869 there were only two synagogal districts in the District, those of Wodzisław and Sobków,<sup>26</sup> in 1877, due to the increase of Jews in Jędrzejów, reports of the head of the District noted the approval of a third, the Jędrzejów synagogal district.<sup>27</sup> Everything indicates that it was established in 1875.* That is confirmed indirectly by the assumptions in the memoirs of Jędrzejów residents, who state that in that year there was organized in Jędrzejów the solemn arrival of the tenth family that settled in the town, i.e., that of Josel Blacharz (Rubinsztajn), who came from Wodzisław.<sup>28</sup> The author of the memoirs surely confuses that solemn occasion with the date of the establishment of the religious community, especially since according to official statistics, in 1878 there were already about 400 Jewish residents in Jędrzejów.<sup>29</sup>

The establishment of a religious community (synagogal district) in Jędrzejów not only accelerated the normalization of the social and religious life of the Jews, but also removed the barriers which confronted the newcomers in carrying out basic religious practices, which are so important in cultural and ethnic identification and integration. The first prayer house in Jędrzejów was established on the Wygnanski property, and some years later there was built on that place a bet hamidrasz "great" and bet hamidrasz "small" (house of study and prayer). From the name of the building's owner, it was called Wygnanski Synagogue, not only for the facilities in that location, but also because that family was the only one in the town, during the early period of settlement, that owned its own Torah, indispensable for carrying out religious rites and communal prayers. The first rabbi in the Jędrzejów synagogal district was Jerachmiel Mosze Mineberg, while the synagogue workers were Berl Zalberg and Elihaju Gilberd.<sup>30</sup>

After the synagogue, the indispensable element in the functioning of the Jewish community was the "mikwa" (ritual baths) and cemetery<sup>31</sup> located by custom behind the synagogue. According to surviving memoirs, the first to be buried in Jędrzejów was a Jewish soldier from Russia who died while in military service in Jędrzejów, and the second was the bachelor Berisz Zylbersztajn, who had already settled in the town.<sup>32</sup>

The Wygnanski synagogue, baths, cemetery and residence of the synagogue workers were the first property of the community. Since, according to Russian law, ownership by a synagogue council was not a matter of legal ownership but of physical ownership, everything belonging to the community was listed as the property of the Jędrzejów resident Izrael Jechiel Gersztajn. He was not only the nominal owner of the community's property, but also the president of the synagogue council, which included not only the president but also, during the 1870s, the Jędrzejów residents Natan Zerach Nechemia and Jona Ajzenberg.<sup>33</sup>

The income of the religious community, intended primarily for maintenance of the synagogue, pension for the rabbi, activities of the undertakers, hospital for the poor, and other needs, came from taxes and contributions which were collected from the Jewish community at rates established by religious practice. Besides the usual customs and laws, in the second half of the 19th century synagogue councils collected taxes and contributions from use of the baths (mykwa), marriage contracts, arrangements for burials, ritual circumcision, entrance fees to the synagogue, issuance of permits to occupy the front seats before the Torah, the sale of pews in the synagogue, apples of paradise,<sup>34</sup> the sale of Passover flour, the sale of wax for Yom Kippur, honorary reading of the Pentateuch rolls, and finally the property of the council was supported by miscellaneous gifts in the money boxes and collected in front of the synagogue on common days and holidays.<sup>35</sup> The amount of individual taxes and contributions was set according to degree of wealth, and the Jews were divided into four groups.<sup>36</sup> The greatest influence naturally came from the dispensation of services, funerals or payments for use of the baths and for circumcision. Additionally set by the rabbi, the circumciser collected payment for rituals conducted at private homes. All of these payments and taxes did not suffice, however, for the maintenance of the synagogue, the rabbi and other expenses of the synagogue council, so the sums that were lacking were supplemented annually by contributions collected from the Jews, which had to be confirmed each time by the district administration. Independently from this, members of the religious community supported financially and materially the poorest fellow Jews, victims of cataclysms and natural calamities even occasionally in distant regions of Russia.<sup>37</sup>

The financial difficulties with which the synagogue council struggled in the early period arose primarily from the small number of taxable individuals, that is, the typical wealth structure of Jewish society. So according to the state of settlement the percentage of the poorest individuals, who paid the least, was the largest and reached 70%-80% of the total.<sup>38</sup> Rich merchants and businessmen could be counted on the fingers of one hand in the earliest period of settlement. Correspondence in the "Gazeta Kielecka" in the mid-1870s tells us that "the settlement of Jędrzejów, having an old privilege forbidding Jews from residing there, now has a small number, mostly not rich traders. On trading days (in town), trade is carried on primarily by Jews from Chęciny and Wodzisław."<sup>39</sup>

The material situation of the Jewish community in Jędrzejów improved markedly at the end of the 1870s and beginning of 1880s. That was connected not only with the increase in Jewish settlers in town, but primarily with their increasing activity in the economy and trade. As we are told by the local press: "almost every day a new family of our very closest ones [this is how the Christians ironically referred to the Jews who were competing with them in economic areas] arrives (in Jędrzejów), opens a new shop in which you can find a few poor goods for several tens of rubles, but in a few years the shop expands, other types of goods arrive, and in a few years they buy a tenement house."<sup>40</sup>

The growing role of Jews in the economic life of Jędrzejów pointed not only to the rapid process of adaptation of the settlers to their new environment by making new economic and trades connections, but also to the growing position of the town in the local network of the region and the economic life of the district. Source materials do not allow an exact determination of the percentage of Jews living in Jędrzejów in the second half of the 1870s, the rate of growth of settlement during that period, or the structure of occupations of the society. From press reports or individual examples we know only that the percentage of Jews grew systematically, while the chief source of support was traditional trade, services and crafts. For example, we know that in 1878 there were just ten Jewish bakers, while several Jewish families that had settled in Jędrzejów obtained tenement houses in the most important area of the town, i.e., near the market square, and opened shops and workshops in them, moving in that way into the category of Jewish "owners".<sup>41</sup> More exact information about the number of Jews in Jędrzejów is provided in a report for the Governor of Kielce Gubernia in 1881: in Jędrzejów there were 3,519 residents, of which 36 were Russian Orthodox, 2,962 Catholic and 521 Jewish.<sup>42</sup> So Jews at that time were about 15% of the population.

The dynamics of Jewish settlement in the first two decades was strong. If we assume that the average Jewish family of the time had 5-6 members,<sup>43</sup> that means that in the whole span of 20 years (1860-1880) about 100 families settled in Jędrzejów. The rate of settlement was greatest at the end of the 1870s. If in the first decade about 15-20 families settled in the town, then in the next decade about 75-85 did, or an average of 7-8 families a year.

The statistical report of 1881 also provides interesting information on the subject of the type of economic activity of Jews in Jędrzejów. The degree of participation of Jews in trade, small manufacture and crafts exceeded greatly their percentage of the population. For example, of the 24 taprooms operating in Jędrzejów, 14, or about 60%, were owned by Jews, of the 30 dealers in goods, 28, or 93.3%, were Jews. Similarly, in the area of small manufacture and processing Jews were predominant, where, of the five largest factories in town, employing between 3 and 12 workers, three were owned by Jewish businessmen.<sup>44</sup>

The structure of Jewish occupations in Jędrzejów differed from other places that did not have the privilege de non tolerandis Judaeis before 1862. If according to the statistical report of 1881 53 Jewish families had shops, taprooms and small workshops in Jędrzejów, then together with the category of small trade, vendors and stall-keepers, the percentage of Jews engaged in trade and brokerage reached the order of 70%-80%, which significantly exceeded the indicators typical of small towns dominated for years by Jewish population. For comparison, in nearby Chęciny, with 60%-70% Jewish population, in the 1870s 38% of the Jewish population was engaged in trade, and 40% in crafts.<sup>45</sup> From this comparison one can conclude that during the early period of Jewish settlement into places that were predominantly Christian, the chief source of support of the settlers was activity in trade, services, or brokerage, as one can judge, provided the best chance for rapid entry into the economic life of the town, or economic independence. Significantly less was the participation of the Jews of Jędrzejów, at least in the first generation, in crafts, although even here it was present (15%) in the community. The preference of trade to crafts arose primarily from the humble means at the disposal of the newcomers. Establishing a workshop was a greater risk for the settlers (greater financial outlay, limited possibility of changing the range of products, long period of establishing a reputation and steady customer base) than establishing a small shop or stall.

The specifics of Jewish crafts were not without significance for the occupational structure of the settlers; in large degree, crafts were directed exclusively toward meeting consumer needs of fellow Jews (a Jewish butcher or baker, with regard to religious prescriptions, made products and offered services exclusively for Jewish clients).<sup>46</sup> The structure of Jewish occupations in Jędrzejów was also influenced by the specifics of the town, where entrance of the Jews into crafts was hindered by Christian craft guilds (tailors, smiths and joiners), whereas trade activity was facilitated by annual markets and "general" fair, organized in the town and attracting hundreds of clients from near and far districts.<sup>47</sup>

A new stimulus, important for the settlement of Jews in Jędrzejów, was the opening, in the middle of the 1880s, of the only rail line in Kielce Gubernia, connecting Dęblin with Dąbrowa Górnicza, via Radom, Kielce, Jędrzejów and Olkusz. Extending from the dynamically growing Dąbrowo Basin (Upper Silesia), the rail line opened new possibilities for small towns. Located near "life lines", they quickly advanced into the group of settlements in the Kingdom of Poland that were characterized in the 1880s and 1890s by the greatest increase in population. As Menachem M. Horowitz recalled, before the construction of the railroad line "the number of Jewish newcomers to Jędrzejów was limited. There were few immigrants and they were poor. This situation changed after the building of the train station in Jędrzejów, thanks to which the town got rail connections with large towns. Before that," states the author of the memoir, "it was difficult to get out of Jędrzejów, even to the nearest villages or small towns. Then everything changed. A trip to Sosnowiec, Będzin, Łódź or Warsaw wasn't any great problem. Civilians got greater possibilities to contact merchants and manufacturers, and in that way there began a rapid development of the town as well as the Jewish population. Before the train station was built, one had to go to Zawiercie or Mszków, the nearest train stations, where the Vienna train went. The trip took a whole night on a horsecart. The road passed through deep and thick woods, in which you could be attacked by highway robber bands.<sup>48</sup> All of this ended with the construction of the train station in Jędrzejów. Jews began a massive influx into Jędrzejów from neighboring small towns, and their percentage of the total began to grow.<sup>49</sup>

After 1885, Jędrzejów became even more attractive for Jews because there began a decline in those small Jewish towns which were bypassed by the railroad. That was the case in towns close to Jędrzejów, such as Chęciny, Wodzisław and Działoszyce, which had been populated for many years by Jews. "Harmful for the development of Wodzisław," it was stated in Echa Kieleckie, "was the construction of the railroad. Now transport is by rail, while earlier everything went by the highway (the Warsaw-Kraków road) through Wodzisław".<sup>50</sup> "Działoszyce," it is written elsewhere, "from the 1870s, i.e., from the opening of the railroad, began to decline. Emigration from the town took on significant dimensions, which brought about a decline in local shopkeeping and trading in grain, wool, and feathers".<sup>51</sup> "Pińczów," we are then informed, "earlier having lively trade, now is in the ranks of those towns who began to date their decline to the arrival of the railroad".<sup>52</sup> The proximity of an attractive trading and manufacturing center (in this case, Kielce) and significant distance from the rail line was also the cause for the decline of Chęciny. "Our poor town," wrote a resident of Chęciny in 1883, "slowly began to decline. The main reason for that situation was nearby, only 14 versts away, in the gubernia capital of Kielce, where the trades people took their goods from here, with some of them spending the whole week there. The reform (administrative) of 1886 did not bring anything to Chęciny, the court was replaced, and the new rail line between Iwangorod and Dąbrowo bypassed the town, removing the last advantage Chęciny had from the Kraków road".<sup>53</sup> In many cases, the "haven" for those residents of Działoszyce, Wodzisław, Chęciny, Sobków and other impoverished small Jewish towns was provided by Jędrzejów.

Changes in the religious structure of the population of Jędrzejów caused by the sudden influx, in the second half of the 1880s, of new Jewish settlers having convenient communication connections is best indicated by statistical data. For the year prior to the opening of the Dęblin-Dąbrowo rail line, there were 577 Jews comprising 14.3% of the population, if one accepts as reliable the data of the Statysticheskie sviadieniia o evreikh [Statistical data on the Jews],<sup>54</sup> while in 1888, i.e., three years after the opening of the rail line, there were about 948 Jewish residents in Jędrzejów, about 20% of the population.<sup>55</sup> The transition from the 1880s to the 1890s also was characterized by the systematic growth in percentage of Jewish population, or the constant influx of new settlers:

This brought with it a transformation in the social and cultural life of Jewish society in the town. New cheders (religious schools) were established, of which there were 12, according to the report sent to the chancellery of the Governor of Kielce in 1886, with 113 students.<sup>56</sup> There was also established in Jędrzejów a Jewish library, and some of the richer residents brought in the Jewish press. In Jędrzejów were distributed, among others, Izraelita, Hacefira, Hajnt, Moment and other Jewish periodicals.<sup>57</sup>

The increase in the wealth of the religious community was evidenced also by the high salary of the rabbi. Chosen as rabbi by the synagogue council at the end of the 1880s, Aron Weinberg earned an annual salary of 520 rubles, which placed him in the group of most highly paid rabbis in Kielce Gubernia.<sup>58</sup> It is sufficient to recall that at that same time, the rabbi of Pacanów earned barely 45 rubles, while only in Pińczów and Działoszyce, towns with the highest proportion of wealthy Jews, was the salary of the rabbi higher. The high salary of the rabbi of Jędrzejów, in comparison with other synagogal districts, did not alter the fact that the Jewish society of that town was very differentiated with regard to property. The group of wealth merchants and manufacturers was small in number, while the predominant group was comprised of small merchants, traders and craftsmen whose incomes barely sufficed to live on. There was a large proportion of impoverished settlers, who failed to start a life in the new environment.

The pace of Jewish settlement in Jędrzejów began to subside in the early years of the 20th century. It reached its peak at the turn of the century, then began to fall slightly, so that during the decade preceding the outbreak of World War I it appeared to be relatively stable.

According to the data of the Warsaw Statistical Committee, Jews in Jędrzejów in 1893 were 25.2% of the population, in 1909 30.9%, and in 1913 31.6%.<sup>59</sup> These figures compiled primarily on the basis of books that included only registered residents, differ greatly from the data of the first general census of 1897. Despite numerous shortcomings,<sup>60</sup> the general census was more accurate. By using these figures, the data of the Warsaw Statistical Committee must be corrected upward, since according to the census of 1897, there were 4,717 residents of Jędrzejów, of which 2,050, or 43.5%, were Jewish.<sup>61</sup> The material of the Warsaw Statistical Committee is nevertheless valuable when analyzing the demographic changes of the town, from the point of view of the uniform criteria applied with regard to individuals.

The high percentage of Jewish population in Jędrzejów noted in the material of the 1897 general census provides evidence, among other things, of the great slowness of the settlers in completing registration formalities or the neglect of institutions (communal offices) responsible for population figures. The phenomenon of divergence between actual and official local residency of Jews was characteristic not only for Jędrzejów, but for other small Jewish towns.<sup>62</sup> "The last one-day census of the population of Działoszyce," states the local Gazeta, "lists 1,200 people less (than indicated by the registration books). Jews in town, who emigrate to Sosnowiec, Dąbrowa Górnicza and Łódź with or without passport, might number in the hundreds. Jewish elders from Działoszyce, however, come to the local magistrate to register new births".<sup>63</sup>

No matter what the growth in the proportion of Jewish population in Jędrzejów was in the first decades of the 20th century (in 1921, of 11,732 residents of Jędrzejów 4,585 were Jews, or 39.1%), there can be no doubt that the greatest dynamism characterized the period at the turn of the century, when according to census figures there were more than 2,000 Jews in Jędrzejów, or 43.5% of the population. Jędrzejów remained to the side during the process of industrialization of the Kingdom of Poland, and the local goods market was relatively shallow. This was the chief cause of the drop in the rate of Jews coming into Jędrzejów at the turn of the century.<sup>64</sup>

As a result of the settlement activity of Jews, Jędrzejów changed in almost every respect. From a small town of the agricultural type, inhabited primarily by Christians, it became a small Jewish-Polish town, fulfilling in the local market important trade, service, administrative and cultural functions. Against the background of other small towns in Kielce Gubernia, Jędrzejów was distinguished at the turn of the 20th century by the greatest dynamism in demographic, economic and cultural development.<sup>65</sup> There can be no doubt that, to a great degree, the direction and rate of socioeconomic changes in Jędrzejów during the years 1862-1914 was determined by the new residents, Jewish newcomers, who, as source material confirms, were the stimulus for the economic development of the town. Their presence also had a great influence on the social, cultural and informal life of Jędrzejów, which became in the course of half a century the "little homeland" of two peoples.

The Quiet Times: Jews in Zwolen — Part II

THE YEARS BEFORE WORLD WAR II

from the Zvoliner yisker-bukh — Yizkor Book Zwolen

New York Independent Zvoliner Benevolent Society (New York, 1982)

Edited by Berl Kagan, translated from the Yiddish by Adah Fogel

Major Events in Town

One of the major events in Zwolen was the elections – both local and national. There were many political parties, and at election time each party tried to put its candidates into office. Sometimes Jewish groups combined forces and ran as a bloc. Each party fought for broader representation in the Town Hall (city elections), or in the Polish Parliament (Seim). The election rules and procedures were formulated for the purpose of limiting Jewish representation. There were Jewish members in the City Council who represented the Jewish population. Zwolen, a town with a 50% Jewish population, never had a Jewish mayor. There was not a single Jew employed in the Municipal Building, the Post Office, or the Police Department. Not one of the town's street-cleaners was a Jew, although the bulk of city taxes were collected from the Jews.

Next in importance to the town elections were the elections to the Kehillah (Board of Jewish Religion and Welfare). All Jewish organizations participated in this event. A substantial representation in the Kehillah brought with it not only prestige, but influence with religious leaders, such as the Rabbi, Moreh Horoe and even brought economic advantages.

In the thirties, despite all hardships, the Jews of Zwolen enjoyed a rich political and varied cultural life. The Jewish audience had access to numerous artistic events of high caliber, as for example, performances by visiting Yiddish theatrical troupes from Warsaw, Radom and other big cities. The interests of the Jews of Zwolen were not limited only to economic and social problems. There was an active community life, dominated by various Jewish political and religious factions.

At the end of the 1920's, new organizations sprang up, and old ones were revived. The most active groups were the Hashomer Hatzair and Betar. Both these parties sponsored clubs and small libraries. There were also a Hechalutz and the General Zionist organization which played a major role in Jewish life in Zwolen. In the middle of the 1930's there arose a new organization – Brit Hachayal, a Revisionist group. Its main purpose – besides Aliyah to Palestine – was self-defense against anti-Jewish riots.

Most of the Jewish Youth Organizations participated in athletics, especially soccer.

Most of the major Jewish organizations and political parties sponsored Kestl-Ovntn (Question and Answer programs). Members of the audience could ask any question they wished, and members of a special committee would answer. These evenings were very popular.

In the years before World War II the situation of Polish Jewry deteriorated day by day, and Zwolen was not an exception.

The Polish National Party initiated its persecution by boycotting several Jewish shopkeepers: it placed posters on their storefronts with the slogan: "Don't buy from a Jew." New stores owned by Poles were opened, and they gradually pushed the already hard-pressed Jewish merchants out of business, robbing them of their meager livelihood.

Only two Jewish storekeepers remained unaffected. These were Zelik Schwarzberg and Levi Boymlgryn. They were known throughout the neighborhood, had years of experience as wholesalers of general merchandise, and were able to compete with anyone.

In all other fields of business, especially among small retailers, the pressure increased from day to day. The Polish peasantry, the mainstay and source of mutual business relationships with the Jewish populace, was shaken to its foundations. Scare tactics, plus constant appeals to his national pride and patriotic feelings, prevailed on the Polish peasant and farmer to shun Jewish merchants.

Most of the Poles in Zwolen established new commodity cooperatives to which the Polish farmer could now sell his products to instead of his old friend the Jewish merchant, with whom he had dealt for many years. The Polish cooperatives were also involved in other enterprises. They sold chemical fertilizers and farm machinery on a large scale, and gained full control over the Polish farmer by making him completely dependent on the cooperatives.

There were a substantial number of Jews in Zwolen who earned their livelihood from "village-walking." Every day, early in the morning, they flung sacks over their shoulders and walked to a nearby village to buy produce from the farmers, and returned to town late in the afternoon. Sometimes they would carry a live calf on their shoulders or lead home a cow.

Late in 1938, many of the village-walkers stopped going to the farmers because they were afraid of walking alone on the road. In 1938 the first fatality of the intensified hate-program occurred. The victim was the Timinicer, who was robbed and murdered on his way home from a neighboring village.

Despite their hardships, the Jews of Zwolen went about their daily business as usual, in fact with even more vigor and determination, because the struggle for survival had grown more demanding. They were facing a real challenge.

All this is gone now – vanished without a trace, as is the rest of Polish Jewry, with its treasure trove of cultural and artistic riches.

The Economic Structure by Leibush Flumenbaum

The Jewish craftsmen: tailors, shoemakers, boot makers, carpenters and cap-makers, occupied a significant place in the Jewish economy of Zwolen.

Hershel Treiman and his sons Yankl, Chone and Israel were well-known and very skilled tailors. (Israel Treiman was active in the Zwolen Society in New York. He died several years ago in Lancaster, Penn.). Pesach Shneider and his sons Moshe and Itche Breintuch were also noted for their fine craftsmanship.

The ladies' tailors were: Samuel Bartmanovitch and his son Chone; Noah Kirshenblatt and his sons Motl and Mates; Yidle Kirshenblatt and his brother Alter. There were several tailors who specialized in the sewing of Hassidic apparel.

Prior to World War II there was not a single gentile tailor in Zwolen. Even the priests ordered their clothing from the Jewish tailor David Strom, who specialized in this.

All the abovementioned were custom tailors only, for Jews as well as for well-to-do gentiles. Mass production of clothing was in the hands of second-class tailors, who employed their own children, and sometimes also outside help. The second-class tailors were supplied with finished articles by tailors who worked at home.

Second class tailors were: Chaim-Ber Flumenbaum and his brothers Ephraim, Moshe, Hershl, and his step-brother Mendel Sherman; Zisi Grossman, Yeki Ilman, Chaim-Leib Mandelman, Israel Flumenbaum (not related to Chaim-Ber).

The Zwolen second class tailors sold their merchandise at the fairs in Pilev, Lipsk, Gnivishev, Drildz [Iza] and Skarishev [Skaryszew].

The Jewish tailors of Zwolen supplied clothing for many workers for the big Polish military factory in Piontek, which was located several kilometers from our town. This factory did not employ Jewish workers, and no Jew was allowed to set foot inside. The only exception was the father of Chaim and Hershl Shlufman, who delivered meat every day to the factory kitchen.

Zwolen artisans were members of the Central Craftsmen's Guild in Warsaw. They had their own "Minyan" in Zisl Grossman's house.

On market day and at the fairs the craftsmen would display their goods in a specially-prepared area. The other days of the week they sold their wares out of their homes.

There were many seamstresses, too, who sewed linen for men and women, and dresses for women. Chaye-Tsirl Kirshenblatt deserves special mention. Her entire apartment consisted of one large room with two beds, a cutting table and a kitchen. Under the single window stood two sewing machines. She was assisted by her four children: Yudl, Serl, Elie and Alter, and 8-10 girls who were learning the trade.

Chaye-Tsirl was kept busy with her work. She sewed for the gentile elite and for well-to-do Jewish women. She was proud of her skill and of the diploma on her wall from a trade-school in Warsaw. She trained many girls who became excellent seamstresses, including Malke Mandelman-Breintuch (now in Buenos Aires); Manya Boymlgrin Finkelstein (now in Toronto), and others.

The shoemakers were the second largest group of Jewish artisans. Among them: the family Gelblatt, Moshe Ackerman, Nehemiah Sherman. They were small manufacturers who employed Jewish and gentile shoemakers who worked at home. They sold their shoes in Zwolen and in other towns. The shoe manufacturer later moved to Sosnowiec, and his son moved to Lemberg (Lwów).

Like the second-class tailors, many shoemakers sold their goods at fairs. So did the cap-makers, like the families Zaltsman, Weisband and the carpenters.

The best furniture was custom-made in the workshop of Hershl (Sonis) Greenbaum and his partner Abraham... , husband of Pesse.

Light construction was in the hands of gentile firms.

Jews dominated all the trade in the town. Wholesale food suppliers were Levi Boymlgreen and Zelik Schwartzberg.

There was widespread trade in grain and flour. Zwolen merchants bought grain from farmers throughout the territory, sent it to the mills in Radom and Lublin and brought back the flour. The largest flour merchant was Joseph Kirshenbaum, also Yankl Hoffman (died in 1979 in Haifa), and Meyer Birenbaum (Toronto).

Merchants of manufactured goods were Alter Flumenbaum, Henech Eichenbaum, Yankl Diment, Mendl Schwartz.

There was extensive trade in raw hides and cured leather. It was exclusively in Jewish hands: Lozer Flumen and his sons Motl and Betzalel, the Waserstrom family and others.

Zwolen supplied large quantities of fowl, eggs and butter to Warsaw. Every day about two dozen trucks brought these products there.

Avromtche Engle, Shmuel-Elye Kaplan and others owned iron works.

Joshua Boymlgrin had a salt concession; Anshl Boymlgrin and his Yankl – gasoline and oil.

The lumber business was in Jewish hands: Jonah Rosenberg and his son Chaim, Lozer (Zeyentskiver) Sankiewicz, Pesach Koychen and others.

The workshops of the boot makers who supplied both Jewish and gentile shoemakers, were in their homes. The largest was the workshop of Moshe Mandelbaum and his sons Shloyme and Mendl; Sholem Weintraub and his sons Mendl, Chaim and Meyer; Toyvyeh Rosenblatt, Fishelle Stern, etc.

There were several blacksmiths: Isser Koval and Motle Minski and their sons; one of whom was called Simche, the other slips my memory.

Leather goods manufacturing of harnesses laid in Jewish hands – the Zweigenberg (Flarkis) family and for a time Tovtche Diamant and his children, who emigrated to Porto Allegro, Brazil, in the early 30's.

Many Zwolen Jews earned their living as bakers, butchers and tinsmiths, hard works for many generations.

Jewish clock makers were: Simche Wolman and his sons Elyahu and Zelig; Mendle Dzezbicki and his two sons and Chaim Yechezekel's Weinberg.

Until about 1935 there were three hairdressers in Zwolen – all Jews: Gimpl and Moshe Shlaferman, and Itche Tanachovitch. Later a Polish barber opened a shop.

Water-carrying was a purely Jewish profession. They were wonderful types: "poor as mice, but honest". Who can forget Motl Eisenberg ("Skap"), Moshele the Water Carrier, Ylvi the Water Carrier, etc.

There were two mills in Zwolen. The largest belonged to Moshe Jacob Goldfarb.

There were two Jewish cereal mills that manufactured oil. One belonged to Laybele Flumen.

In the Thirties Leibush Peisach Eichenbaum set up a saw mill to cut trees into lumber.

Zwolen had several tanneries, run by the families: Eichenbaum, Goldfarb, Rotfarb, Cooperman, who were kinsmen. There were other tanneries besides, owned by Hanover and others.

Prior to World War I the tanneries were a major factor in the economic life of Zwolen Jews. Many Jews worked in the tanneries, or supplied them with raw hides and other materials.

Between World War I and World War II this economic position was greatly weakened by the strong competition of the big tanneries in neighboring Radom. The few Jewish soakers who remained occupied themselves mainly with producing soft leather for local consumption. After World War I, Samuel Eichenbaum, the noted Lublin philanthropist and native of Zwolen, hired a number of Zwolen workers for his Lublin tannery.

Trade and transportation go hand in hand. Without the Jewish driver, Jewish trade in Zwolen would have been a great disadvantage. For generations the driver plodded along highways and byways with his horse and wagon to bring in or take out goods and produce.

Every Sabbath the drivers had their own "Minyan" in the home of Abish Mandelman. After prayers they made a "l'chayim" and poured out their bitter hearts about the troubles they had endured during the past week.

Simche Wasserman used to jest that his horses don't look human. The reason – he would explain – that since he had no money to buy oats for them, they had lost their human visage.

Simche remained a driver until the end, even when all the others organized and began to use automobiles instead of horse and wagon. These former drivers organized into groups, bought several trucks and established rapid and regular routes to Radom, Łódź, Warsaw, Lublin and other cities. At first the chauffeurs were Poles, but later the Jews learned to drive a car: Abish Mandelman and his son Yekl; Mordecai Wegman and his son Mayer (now in Los Angeles); Chaim-Jonah Mandelman, and others. The truck owners hired Leibl Boymlgrin to supervise the entire operation and to avoid competition among the various groups.

Jews also pioneered daily passenger transportation: Moshe-Mendl Eidler; Eliezer

Fuchs; Israel-Moshe Brown and family; Toyve Greenberg; Abraham Zaltsman (Palki).

Noah Lipsman and Aaron-Leib Boymlgrin are to be thanked for organizing the entire trucking enterprise in Zwolen.

There were no large factories in Zwolen. Since the government enterprises did not hire Jews, a Jewish young man who had to discontinue his school studies, was forced to go into the same trade as his father, learn another skill, or even look for work in other cities.

There was a handful of weavers who worked in Lodz. A number of Hassidic young men worked in Warsaw at knitwear, which was seasonal, and return to Zwolen to stay with their parents in the off-season. Other workers who did not have full time employment in the neighboring towns were in the same position.

Some Zwolen Jews worked in the tanneries, some in the mills, some in the big wholesale businesses.

Although Jewish craftsmen usually hired their own children and relatives first, they also employed many outside workers. Thus most Jews in Zwolen worked for the artisans, mainly: tailors, shoemakers, bootmakers, carpenters, bakers, house painters.

Nahum Grossman was the only Jew who worked in City Hall.

Several attempts were made to form a professional union in Zwolen to protect the interests of the Jewish workers. At first the requests were denied by the Polish government, but in 1920 it granted official permission.

Some of the union organizers are today living in Paris: Chone Greenbaum, Meyer Gelblatt, Chaim-Elye Fuchs; and Shimen Lipsman, who lives in Los Angeles. They were the pioneers who established and developed the union.

They acquired a union local, opened a library, and conducted cultural activities. Their main goal was to achieve decent working conditions and adequate wages for the Jewish worker.

Much was accomplished, but within a short time the constant persecution by the government forced the union to close its headquarters, and with it – all public activity.

However, their efforts continued – but not so openly.

Jewish workers of all trades were members of the union.

There were several Jewish barber-surgeons in town, who had originally been hairdressers too: Koyfl Rapaport and his brother-in-law Yekl Bressler. Later Tanachovitch also took up the profession.

The first Jewish doctor in Zwolen – Belfor – set up practice in the twenties. He was also a community activist. He opened the first Jewish bank and became its director. Subsequently he left Zwolen and became Administrator of the hospital in Siedlce.

He was followed by the Jewish doctors Fried, Rozenzweig and Krongold. There was also a dentist – Dr. Kazdan – and his wife.

A Plain Jewish Woman

In our old shtetlach (towns) in Eastern Europe, it was the custom that every Friday, on the eve of the Sabbath, Jews brought their “tcholnt” (a dish of meat, potatoes and beans, eaten on the Sabbath and kept warm from the day before) to the baker to put in his oven. Long before it was time to bless the candles, my mother would prepare the stone pot containing the “tcholnt” and the “kugl” (kind of pudding). Since I was the youngest in the family, it was my obligation to bring it to the baker every Friday night and take it back on the Sabbath after prayers.

We used to bring our “tcholnt” to Itche the baker.

One Sabbath, when I came for my “tcholnt”, as usual – it could not be found. All the others had been taken from the oven, but ours was not there.

Sheve-Liee, the baker’s wife, searched everywhere and finally found our stone pot in a corner on the floor. They had forgotten to put it in the oven.

When my mother found out, she wrung her hands, “Oh, God, what will my little ones eat on the Sabbath, “There’s nothing in house but a piece of black bread!” As my mother stood there sobbing, Sheve-Liebe entered carrying a big pot and said:

“I know this Sabbath will be a sad one for you, so I brought you half of our own ‘tcholnt.’”

My mother wept again – but this time tears of joy.

Besides the bakery, Sheve-Liebe also ran a grocery store, where my mother was a steady customer. We were not rich, and my mother often bought on credit, which the storekeeper entered “in the book.”

My mother also kept a record of the purchase for herself.

When the debt in my mother’s book had grown to 12 rubles – a huge sum for a laborer’s family in those days – my mother stopped buying from Sheve-Liebe. When Sheve-Liebe realized that my mother was staying away from her store, she came to our house and said:

“Itke, what the matter? I haven’t seen you for several days.”

My mother was embarrassed and replied:

“I already owe you 12 rubles. I don’t think I’ll be able to pay back such a large sum.”

“I didn’t come for money, God forbid,” said Sheve-Liebe. “You shouldn’t be ashamed. Come into the store and take what you need, and don’t let your children go hungry. With God’s help, when things will be easier for you, you’ll pay me back a couple of rubles. But in the meantime don’t let that stop you from taking bread for your children.”

It was then that my mother really cried – and I am crying now as I write these lines.

This was how many Jewish families managed to get along – and some even under worse conditions.

Such simple women – women of the people – like the baker’s wife, with their kind Jewish hearts, very often sustained a poor Jewish family with their generosity.

The Zwolen Yizkor Book material was supplied by Lou Schotland, a former resident of Zwolen, who is now living in Mission Viejo, Calif., with his wife, Dorothy Ajzenberg Schotland, formerly of Radom. Both are survivors of the Holocaust.

Outstanding Programs

David E. Rencher, Director of Library Services at the Family History Library, will offer us insight into innovations we can expect in the new millennium, during his keynote address.

Many of the top specialists from the FHL as well as our international experts in Jewish genealogy will present programming geared to assist you in your research. Over 80 programs are scheduled.

Want to learn more about the "how-tos" in a small group setting?—Check out our new "breakfast tutorials" and "small group tutorials! Reserve your place at our special luncheons.

Remarkable Resources

If you have never done research at the Family History Library in SLC, you are in for a real treat! The information is all at your fingertips. . . Accomplish more in four days than you would at your local Family History Center.

The Family History Library has more Jewish records on microfilm than at any other place in the world!

Special arrangements are being made for us to have maximum access to the Jewish records.

Network with fellow genealogists, Special Interest Groups (SIGs) and "Birds-of-a-Feather."

Kielce-Radom SIG Family Finder

In the Autumn 1997 (Volume I, Issue 4) issue of this Journal, we published a "Family Finder" for members of our group. This Family Finder was a list of our members and the ancestral surnames and towns in the Kielce and Radom gubernias that they were researching. This was done for the purpose of informing others who might be researching the very same surnames and towns. Given the number of members that we have and the way ancestors multiply at every generation, it is certain that many of our members are cousins with common ancestors. Since 1997, we have added a number of new members (and lost a few). In addition, we would hope that our older members have learned more about their ancestors and have discovered new surnames and towns to research. For that reason, it may be timely to generate a new Family Finder for our group.

For those of you who want to participate, please send me your name, address, email address (if you have one), telephone number, and a list of the surnames and towns in the Kielce and Radom gubernias that you are researching. Please associate each surname with a specific town or towns. Only towns within the Kielce-Radom region should be included. A list of these towns appeared in Volume I, Issue 1 of the Journal, and is also available on our web site <<http://www.jewishgen.org/krsig>>, though smaller villages within the region are not listed. We are also aware that there may be others who are not official members (who are reading this issue) and they are invited to participate as well.

Send this information to me at <marilyn@mediaone.net>, if you have access to email. Otherwise, you can send it to: Mark Froimowitz, 90 Eastbourne Road, Newton Centre, MA 02459-1206. Our plan is to publish this compilation in the fourth issue of 2000.

IAJGS Conference, July 2000

The 20th International Conference on Jewish Genealogy, to be held July 9-14, 2000 in Salt Lake City, Utah, will afford Kielce-Radom SIG members with an unparalleled opportunity. The LDS (Mormon) Family History Library is just down the street from the conference hotel, and attendees will have many hours of access to all the microfilmed records. They will be able to explore the millions of records that have been the subject of our research.

There will be a number of lectures on Polish research and other topics of Jewish genealogical interest at the conference, with a focus on how to use the records available at the LDS Family History Library. There is also ample opportunity for networking with other researchers with similar interests.

SIG members can also take advantage of special training in how to extract Polish and Russian-language vital records, the way we have been published them in the Journal. We think this is a great opportunity to move the whole field forward. We hope to train members so that we can continue to make more data available.

Complete information about the conference can be found at conference web site <<http://www.jewishgen.org/iajgs/SLCY2K>>. See the flyer on the opposite page.

If you are interested in participating, please let us know.

We hope to see you in SLC, as this is an opportunity that will not repeat anytime soon!

Extract Data in this Issue

Daleszyce	B, M, D	1810-1825, 1847-70	Dolores Lee Ring
Szczekociny	Births	1847-1866	Leah Jordan Bisel
Przedbórz	Marriages	1847-1854	Dolores Lee Ring

The vital record extracts for this issue are 1810-1825 and 1847-1870 births, marriages and deaths for Daleszyce, prepared by Dolores Lee Ring; 1847-1866 Szczekociny births, prepared by Leah Jordan Bisel; and 1847-1854 Przedbórz marriages, also by Dolores Lee Ring. This data has been extracted from the civil registration books in possession of the Polish State Archives, and microfilmed by the Church of Jesus Christ Latter-day Saints (LDS). These extractions include information derived directly from the original registrations on the following LDS microfilms:

#0,729,019 Daleszyce 1810-1819
 #0,729,020 Daleszyce 1820-1825
 #0,729,026 Daleszyce 1847-1865
 #1,192,419 Daleszyce 1866-1870
 #1,199,733 Szczekociny 1847-1866
 #0,719,105 Przedbórz 1847-1854

There are additional microfilmed records available for all three towns.

Daleszyce

The town of Daleszyce ("Dalashitza") is located about 8 miles southeast of Kielce. The Daleszyce records contain registrations for many villages just east of Kielce. Dolores Ring's extracts in this issue cover the Roman Catholic civil registers of 1810-1825, and the Jewish registers of 1847-1870. Her previous extracts of Daleszyce records (1826-1846) appeared in the Kielce-Radom SIG Journal II:2 (Spring 1998), pages 44-51.

This set completes our published extracts of all of the microfilmed Jewish records for the town of Daleszyce; all of the microfilmed records have now been fully extracted and published. The later Daleszyce Jewish vital records are at the Polish State Archives in Kielce, and further indexes will be accessible only via JRI-PL's Polish State Archives Project (see the last issue, page 26).

Some additional information on surnames and patronymics has been derived by the author and editor from an analysis of data from Daleszyce, as well as records from surrounding towns, tracking families over an extended period of time. All conjectural information is noted in square brackets, to differentiate it from the data that appears in the original records. The conjectures do not appear in the original record itself.

Szczekociny

The new town entry in this issue is for Szczekociny ("Shchekochin"), a town in the Włoszczowa district of Kielce gubernia. New contributor Leah Jordan Bisel has provided a large set of over 1,000 births, covering 1847 to 1866. Note that there are no records for 1853 to 1857 in the archives nor on microfilm.

Przedbórz

Also in this issue are extracts of Przedbórz Jewish marriages, 1847-1854. The earlier Przedbórz Jewish marriages, 1810-1846, appeared in III:2 (Spring 1999), pages 31-49.

As with all marriage extracts, these will be of interest to researchers from many towns, because the majority of the marriages include a bride or groom from another town in the region. Marriage partners from Końskie, Radoszyce, Włoszczowa, Gowarczów, Opoczno, Żarnów, and other Radom and Kielce gubernia towns appear frequently. Przedbórz was on the border with Piotrków gubernia, so there are also partners from many Piotrków gubernia towns, such as Radomsko (Nowo-Radomsk), Sulejów, and Piotrków..

Several abbreviations are used in the Przedbórz marriage extracts. A blank space or hyphen indicates that information is missing in the original document. A question mark denotes illegible information. A "P" in the Residence column indicates Przedbórz; "wieś" means village; "D" is district (powiat); "(w)" is widow(er); "(mn)" is maiden name of the bride, if it is not her first marriage; "(d)" is deceased.

Caution

These extracts are intended to assist the researcher in selecting records that may be of use for further study. There may be errors in interpretation due to the uneven quality of legibility of the writing, the microfilming and the condition of the microfilm itself, in addition to errors in the original record books. As always, it is prudent for the researcher, when using secondary source data such as this work, to examine the primary source data for final verification. It is always best for the genealogist to view the actual records pertaining to his/her family to verify the interpretation, and glean additional facts.
