... but first a word from our editor

As we complete our fourth year, I am very proud to say that our journal has published just shy of 1,000 pages — 988 pages, including 486 pages of extracts representing over 25,000 events with the names of well over 100,000 persons, and a host of many other useful articles.

In this issue, we have an article by Ed Yutkowitz detailing his trip to his ancestral town of Stopnica ("Stopnitz"), which includes some useful tips for travelers in Poland; a translation of the introductory material from the published catalog of the holdings of the Polish State Archives in Radom; a translation from one of the Kielce Yizkor Books; notes on a new Polish translation guidebook by Hoffman and Shea; and a transcript of all the burials in the Ozrower Mutual Benefit Society Cemetery in Toronto, including all of the names on the Ożarów Holocaust Monument.

The extracts of Jewish vital records from LDS microfilms in this issue once again include a "new" town — a town for which we have never previously published records: Książ Wielki. The Książ Wielki Jewish vital records were "discovered" by our reader Martin Brandon last year (see III:2,16-17), and Robert Heyman and Shabsa Lis have taken up the challenge of extracting these records. Their first installment, deaths 1826-1867, appears in this issue. The Książ Wielki records also include registrations for Jewish residents of Miechów and Słomniki.

Also a huge set of extracts from Chęciny is once again provided by Dolores Lee Ring — over 900 marriages, covering 1850-1867. These records include marriage partners from many surrounding towns, such as Chmielnik, Kielce, Końskie, Nowy Korczyn, Łopuszno, Pińczów, Przedbórz, Radoszyce, Sobków, Staszów, Szczekociny, Szydłów, Włoszczowa, Wodzisław, and dozens of other towns and villages in the region.

The Kielce-Radom SIG Family Finder which was targeted for this issue has been postponed, due to very few responses. Maybe we'll try again next year. As always, be sure to list your family surnames and ancestral towns in the JewishGen Family Finder (JGFF) at <<http://www.jewishgen.org/jgff>>.

I'd like to thank Mark Froimowitz for completing his first year as coordinator of the SIG. He has done a fabulous job at this tireless task, handling all of the SIG's financial, subscription, printing, and mailing issues. And he's even found time to write a few book reviews and Yiddish translations for us!

Don't forget to renew your subscription for 2001, using the enclosed subscription form. The rates are the same as last year, and we've even lowered the rate for overseas surface mail.

Best wishes for a Happy and Healthy 5761.

This Was Once My Family's Home A Visit To Stopnica

by Edward Yutkowitz

Poland had never been high on my list of places to visit. In my mind's eye, it was a bleak and barren land of peasant farmers eking out a subsistence living in a country whose past — and possibly present — was filled with anti-Semitism and the unceasing hostility of foreign invasion. My grandfather had come from the town of Stopnica, but the only thing I knew about it was that it was located near Kraków. On those occasions when I gave Stopnica — or Stopnitz, as I learned it was called in Yiddish — any thought, I envisioned a town from "Fiddler on the Roof," a town of muddy, rutted roads, of houses with thatched roofs, of poor Jews terrorized by Cossacks. Besides, everyone in my family had left Stopnica nearly 100 years ago.

Or so I thought. Through rudimentary genealogical research, I found my family name on several 19th century documents from Stopnica. But it was my discovery, in recent months, that relatives lived in the town until the Holocaust, that really inspired me to visit the land of my ancestors.

I did a great deal of research, and learned that prior to World War II, Stopnica was a town of about 3,000, of whom about 75% were Jewish. Some were killed in the early 1940s. In November 1942, the Nazis transported the rest of Stopnica's Jews — my relatives among them? — to concentration camps. Most did not survive the war.

Friends and acquaintances — Jews and gentiles alike — were apprehensive about my journey. They assumed that a small town like Stopnica would not have missed its Jewish residents, and would not welcome their descendants coming back and asking questions. At best, I anticipated a poignant and difficult trip through a backward land and a frightening history; at worst, I thought my life might be in danger.

The reality turned out to be quite different.

The Internet proved invaluable to the preparation for my trip. Simple searches turned up a number of sites dedicated to Jewish genealogy and history. Some of these, including the Simon Wiesenthal Center (<http://motlc.wiesenthal.org>), provided information on Stopnica, including its history and various spellings of its name.

From a variety of web sites, I obtained information on hotels and Jewish history and culture in Warsaw, Kraków, and Kielce. Information on the Jewish cemeteries in the town is available on the IAJGS Cemetery Project pages on the JewishGen website (www.jewishgen.org).

I knew that family members had belonged to a landsmanschaft, the Stopnitzer Young Men's Benevolent Society, in New York City, but I did not know if it still existed. An Internet search turned up the name of a Stopnitzer society in Toronto. Members of that organization put me in touch with members in New York City.

The members of the New York organization were Holocaust survivors who knew little about my grandfather's generation, but they did give me personal accounts of the war years. Moreover, they told me of two women with my family name who survived the war. Through the Internet, I was able to confirm this information with the Holocaust museum in Washington, D.C.

I determined that one woman, Rose, was a second cousin. We chatted on the phone, but she was skeptical of our relationship; just as I did not know that my grandfather had left family in Stopnica, she did not know that her grandfather had five brothers — including my grandfather — who had come to America before she was born. While she spoke openly about the war years, her hometown of Stopnica held nothing but black memories for her, and she did not give me her blessings for my trip.

However, a man from the Stopnitzer organization knew of others who had returned to visit Stopnica. While he himself would not visit the town, he understood my curiosity to do so. When we met, he also said I bore a striking relationship to Rose's father, who must have been about my age, 47, when she last saw him nearly 60 years ago.

The most valuable contact I made on the Internet was Tomasz Kozlowski, a 41-year-old science teacher at a university in Kielce. Tom, who had grown up and still had family in Stopnica, graciously e-mailed me pictures of the town — the first I, or anybody in my family, had ever seen — taken both before and after World War II. After exchanging several e-mails with Tom, I revealed that I was Jewish; knowing of Stopnica's Jewish past, he had surmised as much. He also offered to show me the town if I should visit.

Tom and members of the Stopnitzer society warned me not to expect much evidence of Jewish life in Stopnica. At the end of the war, the town was a smoldering ruin; though later rebuilt, it was devoid then and forever of a Jewish community.

Still, my visit was a chance for me to walk the same streets, breathe the same air, perhaps see the same sights, as my ancestors. It was an opportunity to imagine the bleakness of their lives — and perhaps their joys.

I began my trip in Warsaw, a city both more sophisticated and more sterile than I had expected. The city was devastated during World War II. Some areas, such as the Old Town, were rebuilt and look much as they must have before the War. Other sections, including the Warsaw ghetto, are comprised largely of dilapidated high-rises built during the Communist era. Sites of Jewish interest are prominently marked; several restaurants have "Jewish" menus.

Thanks to contacts I made before I left New York City, I had the unique opportunity to meet several members of the Warsaw Jewish community, and to attend Simchat Torah services in the one synagogue still operating in the city. They graciously invited me to join other guests, including Russian, Canadian and Israeli Jews, for a kiddush afterwards.

Following a train ride through the surprisingly picturesque Polish countryside, I met Tomasz in Kielce. A nondescript town, Kielce is known in Polish history as the summer home of the Bishops of Kraków. To Jews, the city is notorious for being the site of a pogrom in 1946. A well-maintained sign, in English, Hebrew, and Polish, marks the spot where the pogrom began.

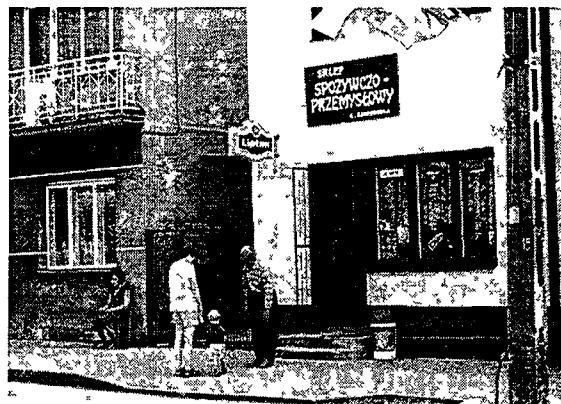

Centrally located in the town, a large former synagogue, prominently marked as such, serves as the repository for official records for the region. One archivist, who spoke some English, was accustomed to inquiries from Jewish visitors. However, she pointed out that records from Stopnica were held in the town of Pińczów, and that I would need permission from the central archives in Warsaw to gain access to them. With Tom's help, I was able to purchase a history of the region, a 272-page book, in Polish, for the equivalent of about five dollars.

During our drive to Stopnica, Tom was curious about Jewish attitudes toward Poles. He is a student of history, and knows quite a bit about the Jewish people. However, he is defensive, perhaps even resentful, about what he perceives as a mischaracterization of Polish history and character. While acknowledging the presence of anti-Semitism in Poland, he does not think it unique, and believes that Poland has in fact been the most tolerant of countries. He talked about the traumatized state of post-war Poland, and the difficulty of two peoples — two nations — occupying the same land, and referred to a theory that the pogrom in Kielce was inspired by Communist authorities.

Tom's English is not perfect, and there didn't seem to be malice in anything he said. Given, too, that I was a guest in his car, there were times when I let remarks go without responding.

Stopnica today is a typical farming village. A large church anchors one end of the town square. In old pictures, the town square was a sparse open space filled with market stalls. In November 1942, the Nazis gathered the Jews of Stopnica in this square for transport to concentration camps.

Street life on a summer day in Stopnica

Today the square is landscaped with tree-lined paths, benches, and a kiosk selling refreshments. Shops surround the square: a furniture store, a grocery store. On a Monday afternoon in late-June, middle-aged women carried home plastic bags filled with fruits and vegetables. Young lovers strolled arm in arm. Children played on the street. Old people chatted in the shade of the storefronts. None seemed to pay any attention to the American tourist taking pictures of them.

The Kozlowski home is a block from the church. Mr. Kozlowski's father bought the house in 1935 from a Jewish family, the Wechslers, who moved to South America. Tom and his brother grew up in that house. Tom's father is a veterinarian, now retired; Tom's brother has taken over the practice.

My first few minutes in the Kozlowski home were awkward. The family was gracious, but only Tom spoke English. He suggested that I ask his father anything I wanted, but it was difficult to know where to start. As a guest in their house, I did not want to ask touchy questions.

I think they regarded me as a rather exotic creature — a representative of the Jewish people — and, in fact, for awhile I was actually answering more questions than I was asking.

Tom's mother was particularly interested in my views on Judaism and on Poland. Tom later explained that his mother admires the Jewish people. His father, on the other hand, is "neutral" on Jews, neither liking nor disliking them.

Perhaps not. But it was clear that Jewish life in Stopnica had impressed Mr. Kozlowski. He is 70 years old, and was only a child when Poland was invaded. Yet, as we talked, I was struck by his acute recollection of people and events from his childhood, his memories not only of partisan activity and Nazi terror, but details of Jewish life before the war.

I don't know if they are representative of Stopnica, but the past has had a strong impact on the Kozlowski's lives. Sixty years ago, Mrs. Kozlowski's father, a prominent civic leader from the nearby town of Szydowowiec, was arrested and taken to Auschwitz. As a child, Mr. Kozlowski and his family hid in the catacombs under the Church while Russian and German forces battled in the town. Tom said that when he grew up it was not uncommon for children to be injured from ordnance remaining after the war. On occasion, too, Jewish artifacts, like candelabras, have been found, sometimes hidden under the floorboards in older houses.

When we arrived, Mr. Kozlowski had been doing repairs on his house, and Tom had not expected him to be able to spend much time with me. Apparently, though, his father saw my visit as a rather special event, and took me — and his sons — on a tour of the town.

A typical street in Stopnica

As we strolled, Mr. Kozlowski pointed out houses in which he remembered Jewish families lived. At one site, he remembered some Jews surreptitiously obtaining pork from the non-kosher butcher who once worked there. He was pleased that I recognized the word "yatka," the Polish word for butcher.

I have heard that anti-Semitism flourished in Stopnica. However, I have also heard that Jews and gentiles generally got along on a day-to-day basis. Tom's father's recollections suggest that there is some truth to the latter. At the site of one building, for example, stood the Jewish bakery from which his mother bought bread.

Some of the buildings in Stopnica are still pocked with bullet holes from fighting between German and Soviet troops in WWII.

While bullet holes are still evident on some old buildings, other buildings that had been destroyed have been rebuilt. On the town square, where the synagogue once stood is now a nondescript commercial building. The Mikvah building still stands, but has in recent years been used as a slaughterhouse.

A street one block from the town square, Mr. Kozlowski pointed out, was once named after Berek Joselewicz, an officer in the Polish army. When there was some confusion about the spelling, Tom's brother made a point of looking it up and writing it on a piece of paper for me. This street also, Tom's father pointed out, fronted a farm that belonged to a Jewish family.

According to Mr. Kozlowski, this building was a mikvah before the War. Since that time, it has served as a slaughterhouse.

From the Internet, I had learned that there were two Jewish cemeteries in Stopnica. Tom knew of one. Mr. Kozlowski knew of both.

One is located a short distance from the center of town, adjacent to towers suspending electric lines terminating in what looks like a power substation. The area is not fenced off. There are no headstones, but broken rocks cover apparent graves. Mr. Kozlowski, his two sons, and I walked quietly and respectfully through the high grass stirring gently in the warm summer breeze. It was very sad and very peaceful, and I couldn't help but wonder if we were walking among the graves of my ancestors.

As a child, Mr. Kozlowski saw German soldiers execute Jewish and Catholic men — partisans, he said — in this cemetery. The Catholic widows, he said, had to pay for the privilege of taking their loved ones to their own cemetery.

Perhaps a mile away, another cemetery is located in a flat grassy area adjacent to a brick municipal garage. It is fenced off, but the headstones are gone — used for paving stones, I was later told by a member of the Stopnitzer society. Mr. Kozlowski described the headstones as "matzevah," a Hebrew word I had never heard before. Across the street from the cemetery is a grist mill, which created a stir in the town when it was built before the war by a local Jew.

I am glad I visited Stopnica, if only for being better able now to imagine the lives of my ancestors. My great grandfather Yehiel was a carpenter, as was my grandfather, Abraham. Perhaps they had a hand in building some of the older houses in the town. My great-grandfather, I have been told, played bass fiddle in a church in Stopnica, perhaps the very church that today dominates the town. Maybe his music brought joy to the great-grandparents of the very people who watched me take pictures of their village.

I think my visit meant something to the Kozlowski's as well. Tom said his father had never talked so movingly or in such detail about the war, and especially not about the Jews who were so much a part of Stopnica's life in his early years. Before I left, the Kozlowski's gave me a small book, published last year, containing the history of the town.

Frankly, I was also filled with gratitude that my grandfather left Poland. Its history aside, Stopnica is a very small town. Even after my visit, I cannot imagine being Jewish in such a place. The trip allowed me to make connections with a past that's swathed in shadows, a past filled with pain. Yet I feel some sense of triumph, of pride, that the descendants of peasants, of carpenters and tailors, came to America and not only survived, but prospered.

On the day I left Europe, an agreement was reached on restitution to Jewish Holocaust survivors. The International Herald Tribune reported that there are 10,000 Jews in Poland. Maybe. Given the numbers I heard in Warsaw and Kraków, I am skeptical. Is there still anti-Semitism? Undoubtedly. But I didn't see strong evidence of it. What I saw was a country defensive about its past, and yet very much looking forward to a bright and free future.

There are no plaques in Stopnica for the Jews. But neither is there a memorial to the "Polish" victims of Nazi terror, nor, for that matter, one for victims of the Communist authorities after the war. I suppose that for most people in Stopnica, and for the hundreds of Stopnicas throughout Poland, time has simply moved on.

For survivors of the Holocaust, I have found, my visit to Stopnica has stirred dark memories — and yet curiosity about the town's present state and occupants. When I returned, a member of the Stopnitzer society called, curious about my experience. He confirmed many of Mr. Kozlowski's memories. I also received a call from my new-found cousin Rose, who now accepts my visit and looks forward to meeting me, curious, I think, about my resemblance to her father.

My journal would not be complete without mentioning my stay in Kraków, a city I found nothing less than delightful. Virtually unscathed by the war, charming and sophisticated, it is not yet overrun by tourists, and possesses many sites of interest to Jewish travelers.

While I have returned to America, I'm not sure my journey is over. I never did the genealogical research that initially inspired my trip, and expect that I will someday go back to complete it. Before then, I will also have the histories of Kielce and Stopnica translated. I expect, too, to keep in touch with Tom Kozlowski; I have many questions left to ask his father. I also hope to speak in greater depth to members of the Stopnitzer society, both to flesh out my understanding of Jewish life in Poland, and to help ensure that the story of Stopnica's Jews is not forgotten.

Stopnica is still a farming community, much as it was when Jews made up the majority of the town.

Travel Tips For Visitors To Poland

For those planning a trip to Poland, some advice: plan your genealogical research well in advance, and visit the important government offices, particularly in Warsaw, immediately upon arrival. Unfortunately, I didn't. One government office was closed on the afternoon I visited. Because I didn't get authorization in Warsaw, I was unable to do research in the town of Pińczów, where the records for Stopnica were held.¹

Keep in mind that the Jewish communities of Warsaw and Kraków are observant, and Jewish cultural organizations will be closed on holidays and early on Friday afternoons.

The Polish tourist office in New York was very helpful, and sent me well-produced material on travel in Poland, including a brochure of sites of particular Jewish interest.

It is prudent to carry travelers' checks, some American money, as well as several ATM cards. Not all ATM machines in Poland take American Express cards. Remarkably, the money exchange at the Warsaw train station did not accept American Express travelers' checks.

I would not advise wandering alone, asking questions and taking pictures, in rural villages. For one thing, most people in small towns are not conversant in English. Small towns everywhere resent intrusions, but the Poles may be particularly sensitive to people coming to claim ancestral property or raise ugly issues of the past. Ideally, establish contact with someone who can provide you with personal guidance. Hotels in Kraków may be able to provide English-speaking guides.

It is not always easy to find lodging in Kielce or Kraków. Kielce has only three hotels. The Lysogory, conveniently located just across from the train station, is plain, but clean, and has a restaurant with a satisfactory menu. However, my room did not have air-conditioning, and I was kept awake all night by the sound of traffic. The Exbud is a modern hotel located outside of town. Designed for business travelers, it has a bar, and a restaurant with an extensive menu, set in a sky-lit atrium. The hotel's phone system did not allow access to AmericaOnline, and presumably other Internet services, but I was told that will soon change. The staff at both hotels spoke English.

Kraków is becoming an increasingly popular destination for tourists and business groups. Large hotels are often fully booked, particularly on weekends. However, a number of small hotels in the old Jewish quarter cater to visitors searching for their roots. At the Esther Hotel, for example, a cab driver offered to take me to Stopnica. He had a friend from the town, had taken other Americans there, and knew where the cemeteries were located. He wanted about $100 for the day, but this was negotiable. His English was passable for sightseeing purposes, but I'm not sure whether he could have helped me to do any serious translation of documents.

One American Jew took his Polish roots so seriously he decided to open a hotel just off Szeroka, the main street in the Jewish quarter. In fact, Alan Haberberg, whose father left Kraków on a "kinder transport," a program to save Jewish children of Poland, was determined not merely to find his roots, but to establish a permanent presence in Kraków. He bought an old building and spent four years renovating it. Open for several months, the Hotel Eden is immaculate, and boasts a bright, attractive, and multilingual staff that is eager to please. Mezuzahs adorn every door, and every effort is made to provide Kosher food in the restaurant.

From the Radom Archives Catalog: Preface, History of the Archives, Description of Holdings

Edited by Helena Kisiel

Translated from the Polish by Gwido Zlatkes

Translation edited by Warren Blatt

[Editor's Introduction: In this issue, we present translated excerpts from the Polish State Archives in Radom's catalog Archiwum Państwowe w Radomiu, edited by Helena Kisiel, and published in Warsaw in 1996 by the Polish State Archives (Warszawa: Naczelną Dyrekcją Archiwów Państwowych, 1996). ISBN 83-86643-75-7. This 235 page guide, in Polish, contains brief descriptions of all of the archival collections in the Radom branch of the Polish State Archives.

The collections are arranged in the catalog (as they are in the Archives) by fond, i.e. by the organization which created the records. Most of the collections are those of various departments of government administration, and therefore most collections will not contain any genealogical information, but there are many which may.

The Kielce-Radom SIG Journal has previously published the list of Jewish vital records holdings from this catalog, as well as an interview with the Director of the Radom Archives. See Volume I, Number 4 (Autumn 1997), pages 21-24.

Below are excepts from the Preface and Introduction sections of the catalog, from pages 5-7, 9-25, and 29-37.]

PREFACE

We compiled this Guide to the Content of the State Archive in Radom because of the great interest in Radom archival materials by scholars in Poland and abroad, students of regional history, as well as business enterprises. The authors hope it will make the access to source information easier, and contribute, among others, in increased use of the Archives by various segments of national economy in solving current problems.

The Guide consists of comprehensive finding aids to the record groups and collections at the stage of their cataloging as of the end of 1986. The aids have been prepared both for the cataloged and non-cataloged record groups. The finding aid about a group or collection is arranged within a descriptive file consisting of several elements.

Each finding aid has a call number and includes the name of the record group, or in case of a group of record groups, or an archival collection, its accepted name. The names of record groups in foreign languages are given in two versions, first in Polish and below in parentheses in their original language. After the record group's name, its abbreviation is given in parentheses.

Below the group's name, the inclusive dates are given for the items included in that group or collection; usually they are the same as the time frames of the activity of the group's creator. The dates of predating and postdating documents are given separately in parentheses after the group's proper inclusive dates. The next information concerns the size of the group; it is given in "j.a." (jednostka archiwalna, archival units) and "m.b." (metr bieżący, running meters). If the group has not been yet cataloged, only the size in m.b. is given.

The next part provides data about the group's office of origin. The catalogers strove to supply the legal status and the date of establishment of the office or enterprise, its competence and territorial jurisdiction, internal structure including the changes it underwent, and the date when the group's office of origin ceased its activity or was liquidated. In case of persons due to whom the group came to being, a brief biography is provided including a characteristic of the person's voluntary work, political involvement, etc.

A comprehensive group finding aid has been prepared for presentation of the data on a group of record groups or a collection of fragmentary records, briefly covering the legal provenance of all originators of the unit. It comes after the conventional name of the group or collection. A similar procedure was applied to the record groups clustered together on the basis of the affinity of their subjects resulting from the parallel role of their offices of origin in the state system at the given time. In the archive's structure these groups appear as separate record groups.

The most important part of the finding aid describes the contents of the documents belonging to the record group. It lists the kinds of archival materials comprising the group by their structure, and following the catalog's order; it indicates the form and the medium, for example, reports, statistical graphs, photographs, etc. Small groups are cataloged by their subjects following the order in the catalog. In order to provide details on the information's provenance, we list the call numbers of the documents belonging to a structural unit of the group or a subject group within the documents of the record group.

The next part of the finding aid contains a brief description of the circumstances of formation of the archival group, and its history before its acquisition by the archive, and afterwards as it became a part of the archive. Then the information is given about the completeness of the materials; also, the provenances of later additions are listed, and/or the size of the part of the record group stored outside of the archive is provided.

The next information regards foreign language materials; what is the percentage of materials in foreign languages [i.e. not in Polish]. Also the call numbers of microfilms are given of the part of the group or the whole group if this group has been microfilmed.

The following important part of the finding aid concerns archival tools. Their kinds are listed, as well as the name of the author, and the year of creating the inventory. Also, the fact of compiling an index is acknowledged. In case of groups not cataloged the acquisition list is provided.

Below the description of the unit there is a bibliography of the publications on the group or the office of its origin, the publication by the group's office of origin, and the publications containing archival documents of the group. Below the finding aid there are initials of its author. The Guide also contains indices: personal, subject, and geographical; the indices refer to page numbers.

A few remarks on the structure of the Radom archive will provide a better understanding of the structure of its collection. As a result of the 1975 state administrative reform, the Radom Archive was elevated to the rank of a voivodship (provincial) archive with the territorial range covering the area of the Radom *voivodship*¹.

By its statute, then accepted and still acting, the Radom Archive has two Document departments: Department I collects archival materials originating from the end of the 18th century to 1945, plus appendices from the 16th century, and Department II with archivalia produced after 1945. Also, the Archive includes Department III: Documentation, Information, and Circulation with a library and reading room. Also, this department provides photocopies of archival documents.

The reading room makes archival materials available according to the rules of the Archive. Scholars can use reference aids to reach the needed information more quickly, especially the lists of groups. A list include the name of the archival group, its inclusive dates, size in j.a. or m.b., and the information on the stage of cataloging. The basic reference tools are archival inventories and indices; however the latter exist only for a small number of groups.

Among printed reference aids we shall mention Archiwalny biuletyn informacyjny o zasobie [“The Archive’s Bulletin on the Holdings”], published in the 1950s by the Main Direction of State Archives in Warsaw.² Also, the Voivodship’s State Archive in Kielce published the list of groups; its part 2 includes the information on the Radom holdings including the names of the groups, their inclusive dates, and their sizes³. Katalog inwentarzy archiwalnych [“The Catalog of Archival Inventories”], published in the 1970s, provides similar information.⁴

The collection of books in the archival library is a valuable addition to the archival documents; it consists of approximately 7000 volumes. It consists of three types of books:

- 1) legislative-constitutional; from Dzienników Praw Księstwa Warszawskiego [“The Bulletins of the Law of the Duchy of Warsaw”] to contemporary publications of this kind (including a rich collection of normative acts regarding the administration of the government property from the 19th and the beginning of the 20th centuries).
- 2) archival information; published by the Main Direction of State Archives [NDAP] and its agencies, and other archives like the Central Archive of the Central Committee of the Polish United Workers’ Party [CA KC PZPR], the Central Archive of the Army [CAW], the Archive of the Polish Academy of Sciences [APAN], the Archive of the Main Commission to Investigate Nazi Crimes [AGKBZH] – The Institute of National Memory.
- 3) publications on the region and scholarly materials from the area that the archive covers.

The archival documents and books which are generally described here are available to the public in the reading room of the State Archive in Radom, Rynek 1, 26-600 Radom, Poland; phone/fax 211-59. The Archive is open to the public on Mondays from 8AM-6PM, Tue-Fri 8AM-3PM; and on “working” Saturdays from 8AM-12:30 PM. The reading room is closed in August.

The authors hope the publication of our Guide will result in increased interest in Radom archival materials, make using these materials easier, and contribute in creating many interesting publications. The authors thank Dr. Stanislawa Pankow and Prof. Andrzej Tomczak for their help in preparing this volume.

INTRODUCTION

Outline of the History of the Archive

The history of the State Archive in Radom, established in 1921, is linked to the history of the archives of the state and local administration existing earlier in the area of the Archive's jurisdiction, especially in the previous century. We shall note that the selection of Radom for the Archive's site was not accidental, as the town was an important administrative center for centuries.

During the time of the First Republic [16th-18th century] Radom was the site of a grod [town], and a starostwo grodzkie [town borough]; their archives were later located in the castle where "two small chambers" were given to it.¹ After Poland's partitions [in 1795] Radom was made the site of the Radom cyrkul [precinct] which spanned over the Radom and Warka districts, as well as the starostwo cyrkularne [borough precinct] within the province of New Galicia.²

During the Duchy of Warsaw period [1809-1813], Radom was the capital of the département, which had authorities of the districts: Kielce, Końskie, Kozienice, Opatów, Opoczno, Radom, Sandomierz, Solec, Staszów, and Szydłowiec.³

Between 1816-1837 the capital of the Sandomierz Voivodship was in Radom; it was governed by the Radom Voivodship Commission. This voivodship comprised of the districts of: Kozienice, Końskie, Opatów, Opoczno, Radom, Sandomierz, Solec, Staszów, and Szydłowiec.⁴ [See Map 1]. Archival documents confirm the existence and activity of an archive attached to the Commission of the Sandomierz Voivodship. On August 2, 1821 the Commission issued an instruction regarding submitting documents to the archive and the rules of its functioning. The decree of the Commission and the instruction were passed to the lower rank offices for enforcement. The reorganization of the Archive of the Radom Municipal Office was supervised by Józef Falkowski, the Archivist at the Commission of the Sandomierz Voivodship, and his assistant Patek.⁵

In 1837, the Polish administrative names (voivodships) were changed to Russian names (gubernia – province), and the Voivodship Commissions were replaced by provincial (gubernia) authorities; thus Radom became the capital of the Sandomierz Provincial Government (Sandomierz Gubernia).

Opatów, Opoczno, Radom, and Sandomierz.⁸ [See Map 3]. These territorial changes caused the relocation of archival materials. Thus after the establishment in 1867 of Kielce gubernia, all documents regarding the districts that became a part of that gubernia were transferred from the Radom archive to the archive of the Kielce Provincial Government.⁹ Since then the documents of the group have been divided. (...)

The Archive of the Radom Provincial Government annually acquired about 2000 vols. of documents; in 1873 its collection consisted of about 30,000 items. The oldest documents originated in the first years of the 19th century; they often included copies of older documents attached as appendices. The size of the Archive on the eve of WWI is hard to determine, because a part of the collection was evacuated by the partitioner to Russia; also, the Austrian occupation contributed to the deterioration of archival materials by moving them to inappropriate storage places.

The Archive of the District Office in Radom had a separate locum in the District Office at 7 Warszawska St. (now Malczewskiego). Its collection was relatively small at 400 items (comparatively, the archives of similar offices counted in 1873 on average 7,600 items in Kozienice, and 11,565 items in Opoczno). We shall note that among its most valuable materials were the outside record groups: of the Further administrative reforms occurred on Jan. 1, 1845 when the Sandomierz and Kielce Gubernias were united, and the Radom Gubernia was established with its capital in Radom. [See Map 2]. It consisted of the districts: Kielce, Miechów, Olkusz, Opatów, Opoczno, Radom, Sandomierz, and Stopnica.⁶ The expanded jurisdiction of the Radom Provincial Government prompted the necessity of transferring the documents of the Kielce Provincial Government to Radom where they remained in the Provincial Archive for more than twenty years.

During the January Insurrection [1863], the Central Committee restored the division into eight voivodships which in turn were comprised of districts [powiat] and regions [okręg].⁷ After the fall of the Insurrection, the Tsarist authorities reinforced the process of unification of the administration in the Kingdom of Poland with the rest of the Russian Empire.

By the decree of December 31, 1866, Polish lands under the Russian partition were divided into 10 provinces [gubernia]. The Province of Radom consisted of the districts: Iłża, Kozienice, Końskie, War Commandant of the Radom District, and the local commandants from Białobrzegi, Przytyk, and Radom. The latter groups partially survived until today; however documents of the Radom District perished.

The Town Archive in Radom had long tradition. Since the oldest times it was located in the town hall at the center of the New Radom market square. In the 18th century fire destroyed the building and many old documents.¹⁰ The new town hall, designed by Henryk Marconi, was erected in the 1850s; it housed the town archive, located near the Chancellery of the Presidium. In the second half of the 19th century the archival holdings was estimated at 10,000 items, including 2,000 items from previous centuries.¹¹ After 1811, documents were transferred from the town archive to the Archive of the Civil Tribunal (Trybunal Cywilny I Instancji); among the others, in 1845, the ledgers of local officials (księgi wójtowskie, ławnicze i radzieckie) were sent to the Archive of Old Documents at the Civil Tribunal in Radom. The Radom Archive of Old Documents was established in Radom (the same as in other 7 towns of the province) by the decree of the Viceroy of the Kingdom of Poland issued on 16 March 1825.¹² It was subjected to the President of the Civil Tribunal, and its collection consisted of 1766 town and land ledgers (księgi grodzkie and księgi ziemskie), 194 town ledgers (księgi miejskie), and pre-partition archival materials submitted by the towns of the Radom province.¹³ The archives of old documents were dissolved in 1876 as a part of the dissolution of Polish judiciary system, and their collections were transferred to the Main Archive in Warsaw.¹⁴ remained in Radom, and after the creation of the Radom State Archive made “the largest and most important part of its collection.”¹⁶

The State Archive in Radom was established on 7 February 1920.¹⁷ Due to the economic straits of the newly restored country it started working only in May 1921.¹⁸ After 150 years of enslavement, Polish archival authorities created the network of archives including ones in the capitals of the provinces of the former Russian partition, in order to preserve archival materials created by the partitioning power in respective provinces.¹⁹ The archive in Radom, established in the capital of the former Radom province, was assigned the area of the northern part of the Kielce voivodship. (...)

During the German occupation 1939-1945 state archives were subjected to the departments of archives at district offices, and these in turn, to the Directorate of the Archives at the Government of the General Government (Rząd Generalnego Gubernatorstwa). On 31 March 1943 these two levels of archival administration lost their independence and were incorporated by the department of internal affairs at the office of the District Governor, and the Government of the General Government. (...)

By the order of German occupation authorities, the Radom archivists were forced to extract from the holdings the part of documents and maps regarding the Polish areas incorporated to the Reich. Although they purposefully delayed the execution of the order, these documents were eventually sent to Katowice, a Polish town incorporated to the Reich. Fortunately, the period of the occupation did not bring losses in personnel, and only small (10%) losses in archival materials.²⁰ (...)

The decree of 29 March, 1951 played an important role in the history of state archives.²¹ It elevated archival authorities to the rank of central office, introduced the concept of state archival holdings,²² and increased the range of duties of the state archival services in supervising growing holdings. The publication of this law coincided with the change of status of the Radom archive to the Local Chapter (Oddział Terenowy) of the Archive of the Kielce Voivodship.²³ The legal base for the archive was its statute which was appended to the Zarządzenie nr 12 naczelnego dyrektora archiwów państwowych z 25 IV 1953 [“The decree of 25 April 1953 of the head director of the state archives”]. This act defined the internal structure of the Radom Local Chapter dividing it into three departments: 1. Department of the old documents of the town of Radom; 2. Department of the documents created before 1918 as a result of activities of the partitioner’s and occupier’s authorities and offices in the area of the former Radom Province; 3. Department of the documents created after 1918 in the area of districts falling into the jurisdiction of the Local Chapter, i.e.: Kozienice and Radom, and after

Description of the Holdings

The holdings of the State Archive in Radom consist of 549 record groups including 199,047 items and occupying 2356.21 running meters of shelves (31 Dec 1986). Alongside documents the materials include technical documentation (518 items) and cartography (6196 items). The collection was developed from the 18th century to the present, although it includes earlier appendices, among others from the 16th century.

The historical part of Radom archival materials (about 60%) is a result of the activity of the authorities and offices of the former Kingdom of Poland, as well as the partitioning and occupying powers, in the former Radom province. An exception is the record group of the Directorate of the State Estates (Zarząd Dób Państwowych) in Radom of the provinces of Radom, Kielce, Lublin, and Siedlce. This record group, as its name indicates, extends beyond the archive's area of jurisdiction.

The historical holdings of the archive were influenced by the development processes that record groups underwent in the archives of the partitioning authorities, among others, their administration, from the Commission of the Sandomierz Voivodship, to the Radom Provincial Government in the years 1817-1866, and then after the administration's unification, i.e. 1867-1914.

Except for the already-described transfers of archival materials caused by the changes in jurisdiction of the respective offices, the holdings were additionally decreased by the removal of documents regarded as expendable by the archivists at that time,²⁶ or destroyed in a paper mill as the Austrian authorities did with the documents of district offices.²⁷ Also, a part of documents was evacuated to the mainland Russia with Russian offices. Town records more often than other types of materials fell prey to fires, for example of the town halls. In regard to the towns in the Radom province, the dispersion of town record groups was exacerbated by their transfers to the Archive of Old Documents in Radom, and then to the Main Archive in Warsaw.²⁸

During the interwar period and at the beginning of Peoples' Poland, the Archive's historical holdings were augmented with documents successively returned to Poland by the Soviet Union. The first part of such additions (to the record groups: the Directorate of State Estates in Radom, and the Radom Provincial Government) arrived in 1923. The next one in 1926 was large (75 boxes); it augmented the record groups: the Provincial Government and the Radom Chamber of Treasury. Receiving documents from the periods of the partition and the Austrian occupation extended until 1935. Also, in 1964 archival documents returned from the Soviet Union (the groups of records of the provincial and district police headquarters, and the so-called fragments of other record groups).

As a part of the inter-archival exchange based on the principle of territorial placement of groups of records, the State Archive in Radom received in the years 1963-1977 the record groups: The Radom Provincial Office for the Peasants' Affairs (Radomski Gubernialny Urząd ds. Włościańskich) for the years 1864-1915, and the commissioners for the peasant affairs for the districts: Iłża, Końskie, Kozienice, Opatów, Opoczno, Radom, and Sandomierz, 1864-1915, as well as the Radom Credit Association, 1899-1944. However, a part of the record group of the Provincial Government in Radom for the years 1844-1866 has not been transferred to the Archive.

In 1963 the Radom archive transferred to the Voivodship State Archive in Kielce the record group of the District Office in Olkusz, including fragmentary record groups from the area of Kielce province covering the period of the second half of the 19th century to the beginning of the 20th century²⁹; in 1965, the Kielce Chamber of Treasury (Izba Skarbową). The same year our archive transferred to the Main Archive of Old Documents in Warsaw the archival materials of the record groups: the Council of State of the Kingdom of Poland (fragmentary); the Governmental Commission of the Internal and Religious Affairs of the Main Supervisory Council of the Charitable Institutions (Komisja Rządowa Spraw Wewnętrznych i Duchowych Rady Głównej Opiekuńczej Zakładów Dobroczynnych) in Warsaw, documents concerning the Radom province; the Directorate of the State Estates in Warsaw, and other fragmentary record groups.

The historical holdings document the history of the area of jurisdiction between the years 1815-1918 (more fully). From the pre-partition period only about 10% of documents survived. The Austrian occupation is represented only by fragmentary record groups of court documents; the State Archive in Kielce houses documents of the district military headquarters in: Końskie, Kozienice, Opatów, Opoczno, Radom, Sandomierz, and Wierzbniak. 45% of the archival materials is in Polish, a little more than that in Russian, and about 10%, in German. Parchment documents appended to documents are in Latin.

Archival materials regarding the 2nd Republic [1918-1939] form about 5% of the holdings. They include the record groups: the records of the town of Radom (for the respective period preserved in a fuller extent), and Kozienice; the Starostwo Grodzkie [Town Borough] of Radom (fragmentary) 1933-1939; and District Boroughs of Kozienice and Radom for the same years, with small number of items. A part of archival materials from these record groups is stored in the State Archive in Kielce. The treasury and credit originators are represented in the Radom archive by the record groups: The Treasury Office of State Excises and Monopolies [Urząd Skarbowy Akcyz i Monopoli Państwowych] for 1920-1929; and the Radom Credit Association [Radomskie Towarzystwo Kredytowe].

Education is reflected in the following archival materials: The Office of Superintendent in Radom (1917-1939); Radom teachers' colleges: coeducational, men's and women's (1918-1936); vocational middle schools (1928-1950); and elementary schools. The holdings also include record groups from other areas of life, like the District Office of Mining [Okręgowy Urząd Górnictwa] 1919-1935; the Radom Town Voluntary Fire Brigade (1878-1940); the offices of public notaries in Kozienice, Radom, and Zwoleń; and the Radom District Court (1917-1937). Outside of the Radom Archive is a part of the documents of the Radom District Court (in the Central Archive of the Central Committee of the Polish United Workers' Party), and the record group of the Radom District Land Office [Powiatowy Urząd Ziemska] (in the State Archive in Kielce).

The period of World War II is documented by about 17% of the holdings. The largest group of records from that period, part of which had been sent to the Reich, secured, and returned to Radom directly after its liberation in 1945 is that of the Governor of the Radom District [Gubernator Dystryktu Radomskiego] for the years 1939-1945. It has been augmented with the archival materials from archives in Kielce and Łódź. Unfortunately, the part of the documents of the Office of the Governor which deals with the activities of German police authorities is greatly depleted. A part of archival materials from this record group, as well as other documents from the time of the occupation are stored in the Archive of the Main Commission of Investigating the Nazi Crimes – the Institute of National Memory (AGKBZH) in Warsaw,³⁰ the Central Archive of the Polish United Workers' Party,³¹ the Central Military Archive, and the Central Archive of the Ministry of Interior in Warsaw.

The holdings of the Archive for this period also include the record groups: the District Office (Starostwo Powiatowe) in Radom, 1939-1944; German courts including the Special Tribunal in Radom, 1941-1945; the National-Socialist German Workers' Party [NSDAP]; the Executive of the Radom District 1940-1944. Also, the archive received the archival materials (prisoners' files) of the Radom prison 1939-1944, augmented mainly with documents received from the main Commission of the Investigation of Nazi Crimes in Poland. Alongside the documents of the town of Radom, the Radom archive houses the groups of records: the Main Charitable Council of Polish Charitable Committee (Rada Główna Opiekunka Polski Komitet Opiekuńczy) for the town of Radom and the Radom district, 1941-1945; and the head of the council of the elders of the Jewish Community in the District of Radom in Radom, 1941, including requests for issuing the Personal Identification Card.

The modest collection of the documents for the period of WW II has been enriched in the 60s, and later with gifts or purchases for symbolic sums of money, of posters and flyers from that time (ca. 500 units); the Radom collection of these materials belongs among the largest in Poland.³²

In the period of People's Poland the holdings grew unevenly. In 1950s and 1960s the small staff of the archive merely preserved the groups of records. Only later we can see some signs of a policy in developing the collection. However, it encountered problems because of, among others, the lack of storage space of appropriate size which in best cases was adapted for archival use, and not designed with that purpose in view.

A large scale acquisition of materials occurred in 1955-1956 when documents of the counties of the Radom district were gathered, as well as only three record groups from the Kozienice district (others were destroyed during the war) for 1864-1948. Also, the archive received the groups of records of the Presidiums of the County Councils (Prezydium Gminnej Rady Narodowej) 1945-1954 as a result of the introduction of the Law of 20 March 1950 on the uniform structure of state administration.

In 1958 the State Archive in Radom acquired the records of civil registries (urzedy stanu cywilnego) from the area of its jurisdiction for 1810-1857. These records are regularly augmented on a yearly basis. As a result of the reform of administration in 1957, the number of the registries increased. The same reform based on the Law of 28 May 1975 on the two-tiered administrative structure of the state, and the change of the Law on peoples' councils caused the necessity of inclusion in the Radom archive the groups of records of the presidiums of district people's councils and district offices in Białobrzegi, Kozienice, Przysucha, Radom, Szydłowiec, and Zwoleń.

In 1965-1966 and later the archive acquired the groups of records of public notaries in Kozienice and Zwoleń 1810-1944, public notaries in Szydłowiec 1901-1915, and Radom 1811-1951. Also the holdings included the records of Radom District Court for 1876-1914 and 1917-1939.

Due to the necessity of the preservation, our archive acquired the archival materials of elementary schools from the area of Radom and the Radom district 1920-1944, and subsequently the groups of records of Radom school superintendents 1933-1939, and 1945-1950. The Radom archive received among others the records of the Pedagogical Lycees in Kozienice and Radom 1945-1961 after their dissolution, as well as of teachers' courses and district commissions (komisje rejonowe).

As a result of the reorganization and dissolution of cooperatives and economic administration, and nationalization of companies and factories, the State Archive in Radom acquired the groups of records: the Cooperative Bookstore "Przyszłość" in Radom, 1945-1951; the Auditors of the Cooperatives of the Republic District of Kielce (Związek Rewizyjny Spółdzielni Rzeczypospolitej Okręg Kielecki) in Radom, 1936-1948; "Społem", the Radom Branch, 1945-1950.

Also, the archive received materials of the groups: Technical and High-quality Ceramics Corporation (Zjednoczenie Przemysłu Ceramiki Technicznej i Szlachetnej) in Radom 1945-1950; the Leather Industry Corporation (Zjednoczenie Przemysłu Skórzaneego) in Radom, 1945-1948; the Radom Shoe Factory (Radomskie Zakłady Obuwia) 1941-1959; Radom Tannery (Radomskie Zakłady Garbarskie) 1947-1959; the Agricultural Mills (Rejonowe Przedsiębiorstwo Młynów Gospodarczych) in Radom, 1951-1962; the J. Sasaki Brewery in Radom, 1919-1958, and others.

³² Druga wojna światowa 1939-1945. Informator o materiałach źródłowych przechowywanych w archiwach PRL, ed. I. Koberdowa, Warszawa 1972.

The archival materials generated in the period of Peoples' Poland constitute about 16% of the holdings in the State Archive in Radom. The future acquisitions will be results of appropriate policy of development of holdings. All holdings of the State Archive in Radom are accessible for research.

Chapter I: Documents of Towns, Municipalities, and Guilds

A. Documents of Towns [Akta Miast]

Introductory information

The State Archive in Radom holds four groups of records of the towns Kozienice, Radom, Szydłowiec, and Zwolen. Considering the fact that in the 1860s in Radom province there were about 64 towns, the material preserved in the Radom archive is a very small legacy. The destruction of town records was caused by fires and wars. A part of the oldest archival materials regarding the towns in the Radom province was transferred to the Main Archive of Old Documents in Warsaw and shared the fate of its holdings during WW II. The surviving documents and town books presently stored in the Main Archive in Warsaw [AGAD] as well as in other archives, libraries, and museums supplement the Radom town groups.

The completeness of the preserved documentation on the histories of these towns varies. A relatively large number of archival materials documents the history of Radom; much less documents survived for Kozienice whereas the records of Zwolen and Szydłowiec are fragmentary.

Most of the oldest preserved documents come from the period of the Austrian partition. Its authorities issued a law on the establishment of the different ranks of the so-called "regulated magistrates" [uregulowany magistrat]. These magistrates were active in the towns under the partition; they performed both administrative and judiciary functions. Such magistrate included: a mayor, a syndic, two assessors (jurors), and a scribe; sometimes also a separate treasurer. Only in Radom alongside the mayor there were four councilors and a town scribe. The judiciary issues fell under the town syndic; there was also a judge (sędzia kawniczy), five assessors, and a county scribe (pisarz wójtowski). The mayor together with the assessors dealt with the administration and supervised the town funds. The duties of the syndic included among others jurisprudence and maintaining the record of deeds. One of the assessors performed the secretarial duties, other ran the treasury and dealt with financial-taxation issues. The issues of the town economy were in the jurisdiction of the economist or the economy assessor. Alongside the magistrate, larger towns had town departments representing the real-estate owners and the owners of artisan workshops. These organs had the right to elect their representatives in the magistrate, supervise the finances and deposits, etc.

In small towns with low income or without their own income, as well as in private towns, the mayors, also called the wojciech performed administrative duties helped by jurors elected by all citizens, and confirmed by the owner of the land or town.

During the period of the Duchy of Warsaw [1809-1813], towns were governed by two kinds of organs, municipal councils and municipal offices. The former had legislative and supervisory powers, the latter, executive. A magistrate was headed by a mayor or a president who governed the municipality helped by councilors.

During the Kingdom of Poland (1815-1861) until 1842 towns were governed by municipal offices, and afterwards until 1915, magistrates. Municipal councils existed for short period during the November Insurrection and between 1861-1863. After the outbreak of WWI the administration in towns was headed by presidents (1915-1916). They were helped by several-members-strong citizens' committees. In the towns under the Austrian occupation, city councils were established; their presidiums included the president of the town. The town directorate served as the executive branch.

During the 2nd Republic [1918-1939] towns were governed by town councils and magistrates elected by councils. During the first period of the independent Poland (until 1934), the so-called Baden system was enacted that included the president and members of the magistrate. After 1934, the town directorate headed by the president was the executive branch of the town council. In 1930-1934 Radom was governed by the Interim Town Directorate established by the Minister of the Interior on 1 October 1930. The town directorate was headed by its director, who from 9 April 1934 was called the Interim President of the Town Directorate (tymczasowy prezydent Zarządu Miejskiego). He was helped by the Personal Council (Rada Przyboczna), nominated by the Voivode of Kielce, which had advisory and opinionating capacities.

During the German occupation towns were governed by mayors having "full and exclusive authority". They were helped by 5-10 assistants, depending of the number of citizens. The mayors of small towns (less than 20,000) were nominated by the district governor on the recommendation of the starosta; in large towns they were nominated by the general governor. The mayor's authority was strictly limited to exact following the policy of the German occupation authorities.

After the liberation, the town people's councils (miejskie rady narodowe) assumed the power as a legislative and supervisory bodies. From 1950, the town directorate was the executive body of the councils. The members of the town people's council elected from among themselves a presidium, i.e. the president, the vice-president, and three councilors. Also, the councils elected permanent and temporary commissions. The town directorate consisted of the president, the vice-president, and three councilors (ławnicy). The town directorate consisted of departments, divisions, sections, and cells.

Kielce

from Sefer Kielce. Toldot Kehilat Kielce. Miyom Hivsuduh V'ad Churbanah
[Book of Kielce. History of the Community of Kielce. From Its Founding Until Its Destruction]

Edited by: Pinchas Tzitron, published in Tel Aviv, 1957, pp. 264-269.

Translated from Yiddish by Fred Cutter and Mark Froimowitz

Kielce was a large Jewish center where, before the war, there lived 22,000 Jews. But the economic and cultural position that Jews occupied here far exceeded their number. The picture of Kielce was Jewish. The long street beginning from the railroad station till far past the city center and all of the cross streets were thickly settled with Jews and occupied by Jewish stores. The signs over the stores, the houses themselves, the people on the streets - Jews and Jewishness. Though the pre-war Polish powers compelled the Jewish manufacturers to remove Jewish workers and to replace them with Polish ones, the Kielce industries remained Jewish and Kielce was dominated by the Jewish family Zagiski, the owner of the large lime kilns that supplied lime for all of Poland.

Kielce did not have those deep traditions of the old Jewish cities like Lublin or Kraków. She was the youngest Jewish community in Poland. Until the Polish "rebellion" in the year 1863, there was not a single Jew in Kielce. After the removal of the prohibition for Jews to live there, a Jewish life was established in the course of a short time which, from that time on, increased continuously until the great catastrophe of 1939.

Because of her youth, Kielce did not have famous Yeshivas and Talmud Torahs. Here, Jewish life developed more under the influence of trends toward Polish culture. Also later, the Jewish secular culture did not hold back her great ambitions here. However, Kielce was a city with a Jewish heart, the same Jews as in Warsaw and other cities, the same readiness to sacrifice, the same tie to Jewish qualities and Jewish ways. Just the opposite, because of her upstart status, the wallets of Kielce Jews were more open than in other cities. As if she wanted with charity and generosity to atone for her lack of a Torah tradition.

Among the Kielce Jewish citizens, the largest influence was Zionism. But, other Jewish political parties also had an honest share here. And, just as in the other cities, the Kielce Jews believed that they were building an eternal place, and in that eternal place would play out all Jewish salvations. They would, they believed, through their arduous work, build a Jewish state in the land of Israel, to shape the socialist revolution in Kielce. They would free themselves and others. And, in Kielce itself, they would have deeper roots than until now.

Now I have come to Kielce and found all that Jews have created. But of they themselves, of the Jews, I found only a few. Literally, only a few Jews. And not in their houses did I find them, but only accidentally, the way that one meets people in a bus depot.

Here, it is the opposite of other cities. There is vast movement. The streets are filled with people. For those who did not know the city before the war, it will look normal. He will not recognize that vivaciousness and creativity has been taken away from the population.

It was - beginning in 1940 - when in Kielce there were found 28,000 Jews. When, after the take over of Poland by the Germans, the Jewish wandering began. Better said, the Jewish running. Several thousands Jews fled Kielce. They were running to the Soviet side toward Lemberg. Later, many of them came back in order "to die in their own bed". Jews also came from nearby towns. Two thousand Jews came from Lodz and from the Lodzer province. On the eve of Passover 1941, 28,000 Jews were locked in the ghetto. Compared with other cities, the Kielce ghetto was large enough. The local Polish leaders asked the Germans to designate a large ghetto since overcrowding causes the outbreak of epidemics from which everyone suffers, including the Polish population. The Germans accommodated the request of the Polish city fathers. However, they later realized that precisely what the Polish leaders want is against the policy of the Germans. They, the Germans, need epidemics and the largest possible gas chambers. They cut Warsaw Street off from the ghetto and the crowding gave rise to epidemics, a natural annihilation before they had launched "a produktive" [translator's note: not known]. An epidemic of typhus breaks out which takes 4000 victims.

In the ghetto, however, a much worse epidemic breaks out, degeneracy. An assimilated Jew, Herman Levi informs on the president of the Jewish Council, Dr. Moshe Pelz, who did all things possible to lighten the lives of the Jews in the ghetto, that he is working against the German power. Dr. Pelz is sent to Oświęcim (Auschwitz) where he dies in the gas chamber and he, Herman Levy, takes over the leadership of the Jewish Council like a plain Gestapo agent. He also, after his "accomplishments", dies in November 1942 in the Oświęcim gas chambers. The youth in the ghetto prepare an underground movement. However, the same dark process repeats itself as in all other Polish cities. Against the Jews are not only the Germans. The Jews are completely alone. The Polish organizations have help from abroad. They have weapons, but they do not want any contact with the Jews. The ghetto remains with empty hands and without any hope of someone's help from the external world. Except for those lying in wait for Jewish boys, the internal enemies, the Jewish police. The ghetto is too crowded to allow someone to do something in a conspiracy.

The 20th August 1942 begins the end of all hopes. The German "Zondercommando" with the Ukrainian, Lithuanian, and Polish helpers occupy the ghetto and, within several days, they liquidate the Kielce community. The "norm" is six thousand Jews a day. The command is to kill more Jews on the spot. In the time of the "resettlement", the streets, the houses, and the bunkers are flooded with Jewish blood. Thousands of dead Jews are scattered in the streets. A wild slaughter goes on for a whole week. Every second day, 6000 Jews are brought out - on the 20th, the 22nd and the 24th of August. At the end, there remain in the ghetto not more than 2,100 Jews. Among them 45 children from the police, the doctors, and the Jewish Council.

When 600 Jews fall to the last transport, they become the complement of left behind workers and 1500 Jews are confined in the Kielce work camp [translator's note: There was a Hasag slave labor camp in Kielce that manufactured grenades; see Volume 4, Number 3]. With their hands, the German murderers gather together the plunder. Here, the Jews will live until their work ends. Left are only the young, strong ones. They now begin now to prepare themselves intensively for a revolt. The organizers are David Bachwiener, Gershon Leftkowich and the younger Chmielevski. They manufacture weapons by themselves. David Bachwiener makes grenades by himself. But, a provocateur places himself in the movement, that is Yahan Spiegel, a Vienna Jew, the chief of the Jewish police in the camp. He wins the trust of the organizers and they confide to him their plans. Yahan Spiegel believes that, by giving away the organization, he will win life for himself and his family. He gives the organization into the hands of the Gestapo and all fall the death of holy martyrs. Later when the Germans liquidate the work camp and they send the provocateur to Oświęcim, he dies there at the hands of two religious Jewish boys, the brothers Shlomo and Yehuda Perl from Kielce.

The Jewish community of Kielce no longer exists. After the war, she tried to revive herself. A few Kielce Jews saved themselves in Russia. The remainder came out from the German camps. 400 Kielce Jews came home and wanted to start anew as was done 80 years ago. But, the Polish population had decided not to allow any more Jews in Kielce. The triumph of the German murder of the Jews was also their triumph and they would not allow it to be pulled from their hands. And they made a pogrom against Jews in 1946 upon a pattern of a "resettlement" from the German- Ukrainian "Zondercommando".

The current representative of the Jews in Kielce, Isadore Cohen leads me to the house where most of the victims fell. He tells me that the tactics of the Poles were well thought out. Precisely as if the pogrom was planned out before hand. With appropriate propaganda in the streets. And the pogrom was carried out through the unified power of all of the Polish strata. They killed the Jews leisurely in cold blood while they were sure that no one would interfere with their work. Hoodlums from their security forces also participated in the pogrom.

The central power liquidated the pogrom. About ten pogrom perpetrators were shot. And even several officers of the security forces were punished for their "slow interventions" at the time of the pogrom. However, the father of the pogrom, Bishop Hlond remained in Kielce. And Jews ran away over the borders. They had had, call it, enough, Kielce and this land as all that was dearest is crushed and destroyed.

In Kielce are left about 20 Jews, Jewish boys and girls, whom in the streets you will not recognize as being Jewish. Where do these Jews live? No one knows. When I came to Kielce, a policeman on the street informed me that, if I was looking for Jews, they must live near the security forces, because they are afraid to live just anywhere in the city. And indeed, in a house near the police station, I found three apartments where Jews lived. In the small rooms is the bed with the table and oven together. There, in the evening, I had a meeting with the whole Jewish population of Kielce. I was on no account able to determine what holds this score of Jews here. From one woman, I heard that she is there temporarily.

She is battling a Polish woman about her sister's child whom the Polish woman will not return. Several boys occupy themselves with selling Jewish houses. One young man declared to me that, in any case, the Jews have lost the war, so what difference does it make how one's few years end. Sitting here are about a score of Jews as in a station from which one can come and go away. But the passengers are, in any case, homeless, to where should they go?

Characteristic of the Kielce Poles is this. After the Germans were driven away, they took upon themselves to destroy what the Germans had not yet destroyed. The Germans had polluted the Kielce cemetery. They had made it into an execution place. They had polluted the fence with Jewish gravestones. After the Germans were driven away, Polish hooligans took to the fence and, in the course of several days, completely wrecked it. Now the Jews have built a new fence and erected at the cemetery a memorial for the murdered Jews during the German occupation and during the pogrom.

The large beautiful synagogue was converted by the Germans to a warehouse in which was found the bedding of the Jews after the "resettlement". The entire huge building was filled with Jewish pillows and comforters. After the liberation, the synagogue was converted by the Poles to a toilet for peasants who come to the large synagogue plaza with their wagons on market day. When I, with the mentioned Isadore Cohen, went together to look at the synagogue, we found there a group of Polish schoolchildren who had taught themselves to aim with stones in the remaining panes of glass in the windows. That was the successor generation to the hoodlums who dug up tens of graves in the cemetery and robbed the gold teeth of the dead. They are the offspring of those who took hundreds of gravestones from the cemetery and dragged them away to their homes for building purposes.

The second synagogue in Kielce - Zagiski's synagogue - was converted to an iron warehouse.

All that happened in Kielce after the liberation was a liquidation of every trace of the Jews. The pogrom in Kielce was a continuation of the liquidation of the remainder of the large Jewish community. A total of about 500 Jews remained in Kielce and the murderers destroyed also the remnant of the escapees and with that ended the history of Jewish existence in that city.

Burials in the Ozrower Mutual Benefit Society Cemetery, Toronto

The cemetery is located in the northeast corner of the Mount Sinai Memorial Park, 986 Wilson Ave., Toronto, Ontario, Canada. It is just east of Keele St. and Wilson Ave. This list contain 224 burials, 1936-2000. Those buried during the first 30 or 40 years were from Ożarów, the more recent burials are not necessarily so.

Ozarower Mutual Benefit Society
Holocaust Monument
Mount Sinai Cemetery, Toronto

Below is a transcription of the Holocaust Monument in the Ozrower Mutual Benefit Society Cemetery in Mount Sinai Cemetery in Toronto. It contains 130 family entries, representing over 400 individuals. The surnames are inscribed in English, with the given names in Yiddish. Thanks to Lucy Shiffman Sadowski for the photographing the monument, and Warren Blatt for transcribing the names.

This new publication includes more than 60 Polish-language documents and extracts from American and European sources, analyzed and translated. They include extracts from birth, death, and marriage records of various formats; gazetteer entries; revision lists; obituaries; population registers; military service records; passports; etc. It also has sections on Polish grammar, phonetics, and spelling; information on how to locate records in America and Europe; a chapter on gazetteers and how to use them, with 12 maps showing Poland's changing borders and divisions; a vocabulary list of more than 60 pages, featuring terms most likely to be found in records, including many overlooked by most dictionaries.

Many types of documents are covered, though not all of the document types in this book will be relevant to a Jewish genealogist, such as obituaries in Polish-American newspapers, baptismal certificates, Polish fraternal documents, parish histories, cemetery inscriptions, Catholic saint's days, etc.

The sections on Polish grammar and spelling are outstanding, and will enhance the knowledge of anyone who has had questions translating personal and place names found in Polish-language documents.

Many useful appendices are included, such as a guide to reading letters from the Polish State Archives, a list of common first names, abbreviations used in Polish gazetteers, etc.

This new work nicely complements Judith A. Frazin's A Translation Guide to 19th-Century Polish-Language Civil-Registration Documents, 2nd ed. (Chicago: JGS of Illinois, 1989), which focuses specifically on how to translate the Napoleonic format vital records used in the Kingdom of Poland during the 1810-1867 period. Judith Frazin's book has recently been reprinted, and is available for $25 from JGS of Illinois, c/o 1025 Antique Lane, Northbrook, IL 60062.

This book is a must-have for any serious researcher of genealogy in Poland. I eagerly anticipate the additional forthcoming volumes, especially the Russian-language volume.

An overview of Jewish vital records in Russian Poland

Years	1808 - 1825	1826 - 1867	1868 - 1917	1918 - 1942
Where Recorded	Catholic Civil Transcripts	Separate Jewish registers
Language	Polish		Russian	Polish
Location of Registers	Records older than 100 years are kept in regional branches of the Polish State Archives. Many of these records have been microfilmed by the Mormons, usually up to around 1870-1880.			Records less than 100 years old are typically kept in each town's Civil Records Office (Urząd Stanu Cywilnego).

This chart applies only to records in localities within the ten gubernias of Congress Poland, the semi-autonomous region under Russian rule known as the "Kingdom of Poland" (or Congress Poland, aka "Russian Poland"). This area covered forms almost half of present-day Poland.

For other localities which are now part of Poland (e.g. former parts of Galicia, Prussian Poland, Grodno Gubernia), the record format, language, periods covered and locations are different.

For more information, see "Vital Records in Poland - A Primer" in Kielce-Radom SIG Journal, Vol. I, No. 2 (Spring 1997), pages 3-7, which is also online at <<http://www.jewishgen.org/infofiles/polandv.html>>. For specific details on the years and types of Jewish vital records available for towns in Poland, see Jewish Roots in Poland: Pages From The Past and Archival Inventories, by Miriam Weiner (Routes to Routes Foundation, Inc. 1997). Extract Data in this Issue

Książ Wielki	Deaths	1826-1867	Robert Heyman
Chęciny	Marriages	1850-1867	Dolores Lee Ring

The vital record extracts for this issue are 1826-1867 deaths for Książ Wielki, prepared by Robert Heyman; and 1850-1867 Chęciny marriages, prepared by Dolores Lee Ring. This data has been extracted from the civil registration records in possession of the Polish State Archives, and microfilmed by the Church of Jesus Christ Latter-day Saints (LDS). These extractions include information derived directly from the original registrations on the following LDS microfilms:

- #0,753,048 Książ Wielki 1826-1867
- #0,730,266 Chęciny 1850-1853
- #0,730,267 Chęciny 1854-1859
- #0,730,268 Chęciny 1860-1863
- #0,730,269 Chęciny 1864-1865
- #1,192,416 Chęciny 1866-1867

Książ Wielki

Jewish vital records for Książ Wielki are found on LDS microfilm numbers #0,753,047 and #0,753,048. The first microfilm contains births from 1826-1846 as the last item on the film, and the second microfilm contains births from 1847-1865, marriages from 1847-1865, and deaths from 1826-1867 (1866 and 1867 are found in the retakes section).

We are indebted to Martin Brandon for finding these records. They were reported in the Spring 1999 issue of the Kielce-Radom SIG Journal (III:2, pp. 16-17).

All extracts reported in the Kielce-Radom SIG Journal carry the admonition for the researcher to do the research themselves. This is particularly true for the Książ Wielki records, for several reasons. First, the handwriting of at least one of the clerks is particularly difficult to understand, thus making transcription errors highly probable. Second, there is evidence of a number of errors in the records in the matter of dates and names. For at least the earlier records, too many of the dates occur in the middle of the month. One death registration lists a date of February 29, 1854, and two births are dated April 31! Third, the preponderance of surnames that are derived from, or even equal to, given names is a further source of errors. Finally, several of the records contain so little information that a careful reconstruction of the family is necessary to place them in context. For example, some death registrations only give the first name of the deceased. I suspect in these cases, the father is one of the witnesses, which have not been extracted in these records.

Many early death records are numbered here for convenience only. They are not numbered on the microfilm. Anomalies you may notice here do exist – number 21 was skipped in 1828, and 1837 records are numbered consecutively with 1838. In addition, it is difficult to notice where one year ends and another begins, making finding the actual records a possibly challenging experience.

Indices exist for all records, however, but they are not the standard indices. The records are arranged in sets. The first set on microfilm #0,753,048 is deaths from 1826-1846. Next come births for 1847-1859, then marriages from 1847-1859. Next come the remaining death records. All of these have a cumulative index at the end, which refers to a page number, which appears to be on all pages, but may be difficult to find. It is possible that the 1866 and 1867 deaths are not indexed – I have not checked.

The Jewish vital records kept in Książ Wielki were in reality the records for a larger region, including the residents of the towns of Słomniki, Miechów and numerous villages throughout Miechów powiat. In the case of the town of Miechów, separate Jewish registers for that town were kept beginning in 1870. However, the Miechów records have not been microfilmed — those records that are older than 100 years can be found at the Jędrzejów branch of the Polish State Archives.

From the birth records, it seems that a high percentage of the Jews in this area did not live in the towns of Książ Wielki, Słomniki and Miechów, but rather in the numerous smaller villages in the area. Almost all marriage records involved participants from two different towns, likely reflecting the small size of the Jewish population in the cities and villages of this region.

Jewish birth and death records for Książ Wielki before 1826 have not been found and the same is true for marriage records before 1847. Any help in identifying the location of these earlier records would be appreciated.

— Robert Heyman and Shabsa Lis

Chęciny

Also in this issue are extracts of Chęciny marriages, 1850-1867, extracted once again by Dolores Lee Ring. Her extracts of the later Chęciny marriage records, 1868-1884, appeared in III:1 (Winter 1999), pp. 37-58.
