... but first a word from our editor

Welcome to the first issue of our sixth year of publication. I hope that you will find the contents interesting, and useful in learning about the world of our ancestors.

This issue begins with a revised list and map of the towns in Kielce and Radom gubernias. This list and map appeared in our very first issue (Winter 1997), but since that time we have learned quite a few things about our region. Thus, we are reprinting this material with revisions.

The subject of several pieces in this issue is the town of Końskie ("Kinsk", in Yiddish): articles, transcripts and extracts. We begin with a translation of the Końskie article from the first volume of Yad Vashem's Hebrew-language Pinkas HaKehillot Polen, the "Encyclopaedia of Jewish Communities" of Poland. We again thank Yad Vashem for granting permission to translate and publish these excerpts. We also have lists of burials in two New York area landsmanshaft cemeteries for Końskie, and a transcription of the 1929 Polish Business Directory entries for Końskie.

Końskie is also included in the extracts of Jewish vital records from LDS microfilms in this issue. Końskie is a "new" town for us, for which we have not previously published extracts. We present the marriage records of 1860-1884, extracted from the Polish and Russian by Dolores Lee Ring. Also in this issue are extracts of Jewish births in Iłża, 1866-1877, extracted by David Price.

Other articles in the issue include the conclusion of the story of the Ozarów cemetery restoration, which describes the recent re-dedication ceremony; and the travelogue of a visit to Zawichost, a town in Sandomierz district in the southeast corner of our region.

And don't forget JRI's "Polish State Archives" project – Jewish Records Indexing-Poland's project to obtain indexes of non-microfilmed Jewish vital records of the late 19th century. There are now Archive Coordinators for several of the archives holding the Jewish vital records for towns in Kielce and Radom gubernias. See the report on the Pińczów Archives on page 38 of the last issue. The Pińczów archive holds the Jewish vital records for Busko-Zdrój, Chmielnik, Działoszyce, Nowy Korczyn, Pacanów, Pińczów, Stopnica, Szydłów, and Wiślica. The indexing of these records is now underway in Poland, but none of the data will be posted on the JRI website until the requisite funds are raised. I encourage all of our members with an interest in these towns to contribute to this project. Please participate in this important endeavor.

Towns in Kielce and Radom Gubernias

by Warren Blatt

The table on the following two pages lists all major Jewish communities in Kielce and Radom gubernias.

- Town - Name of the town, in the current Polish spelling.
- District - Name of the district (Polish powiat) that the town was in, during the 1867-1917 period. Source: Atlas geograficzny ilustrowany Krolestwa Polskiego, edited by J. M. Bazewicz (Warszawa: [1907]).
- 1897 Pop. - Jewish population in 1897, according to the Russian All-Empire Census, as cited in Еврейская Энциклопедия [Evreiskaia Entsiklopediia = Jewish Encyclopedia] (St. Petersburg: Brokhaus-Efron, 1906-1913). Articles on "Kielce Gubernia" (Vol. IX, cols. 949-951) and "Radom Gubernia" (Vol. XIII, cols. 268-271), and articles for each of the 14 powiats (districts) contain population statistics for all towns with a total population of 500 or more.
- 1897 %Jew - Percentage of the town's population that was Jewish in 1897, calculated from the population figures in Evreiskaia Entsiklopediia.
- 1931 Pop. - Jewish population in 1931, according to the second national census of Poland of 1931. These figures are taken from Black Book of Localities Whose Jewish Population was Exterminated by the Nazis (Jerusalem: Yad Vashem, 1965); which in turn are taken from Drugi powszechny spis ludności z dnia 9 grudnia 1931 r. (Warszawa: Główny Urząd Statystyczny, 1934-1938).
- Lat./Long. - The town's latitude and longitude. Positions are taken from the JewishGen ShtetlSeeker <<http://www.jewishgen.org/ShtetlSeeker>> ; which is based upon the U.S. Board on Geographic Names (BGN) database: Gazetteer of Poland. 2nd edition (Washington: Defense Mapping Agency, 1988).
- FHL microfilms - Years for which Jewish vital records (births, marriages and deaths) have been microfilmed by the Genealogical Society of Utah (the microfilming arm of the LDS Family History Library). Source: Family History Library Catalog, <<http://www.familysearch.org>> , and corrections based on personal knowledge. See the FHL for details and microfilm ordering numbers.

The notation "RC" indicates that there are civil transcripts of Roman Catholic vital records listed in the FHL for the period of 1810-1825. It is during this period that the Roman Catholic civil transcripts included Jewish registrations. Separate records were kept by each religious community beginning in 1826.

Provinces: The FHL uses Poland's 1945-1975 provincial borders. Most of the old Kielce and Radom gubernias (1867-1917) are covered by the 1945-1975 province of Kielce. However, the borders do not overlap exactly, and some areas are covered by neighboring provinces: Kraków province in the southwest (parts of old Olkusz and Miechów districts); Katowice province (part of old Olkusz district); and Lublin province in the northeast (part of old Koziernice district).

There were thousands of other smaller villages in the Kielce-Radom region, which are not listed here. Their vital records are included amongst those of a neighboring larger town. To determine the location of a village, you can consult the JewishGen ShtetlSeeker at <<http://www.jewishgen.org/ShtetlSeeker>> .

The Jewish Settlement until 1918

Końskie was a center for the nobility starting the 12th century. Iron mines and smelting developed in the area of Końskie. The smelting industry underwent rapid growth in the 18th century, hand in hand with the flow of artisans and specialists from Germany, as well as workers from the surrounding villages. At the same time, the wood and leather industries developed. In 1748, Końskie received the status of a city. In 1867, it became the capital city of the powiat (district).

The first sources about the Jewish population of Końskie are from the 16th century. In 1588, the King granted the Jews of Końskie a royal warrant, which allowed them unlimited trade in foodstuffs in the towns and villages of the area. In 1635, the warrant was re-affirmed by the king's heir. The Jewish population in Końskie grew towards the end of the 18th century and in the early 19th century, and it became one of the largest in the entire area. The growth was due to the growth in the industries in Końskie itself and in the surrounding estates which belonged to the local prince. The local industries produced metal-products, and in the second half of the 19th century, a large number of carriages (up to 400 a year), and the Jews of Końskie sold these products in the local markets and fairs as well as at the great fairs in other cities (the distant city of Lubicz, for example). The main source of income for the Jews of Końskie was trade. Almost all the local trade was under their control. In 1863, they had: 5 wholesale warehouses of metal-products, 8 dry goods stores, 4 delicatessens, 4 stores for wines and spices, 16 bars and restaurants, and 82 grocery stores. Several Jewish wholesale merchants would buy the wheat in the district and bring it to Piotrków Trybunalski and Warsaw. Among the 120 craftsman who registered in Końskie at that time, the Jews were mainly represented in their traditional occupations. In 1863, there were 13 Jewish tailors, 3 hatmakers, 24 shoemakers, and 11 carpenters in town. There were also one or two of these craftsmen who were butchers and bakers. An important source of income for the Jews was the transportation of goods. A few dozen families lived from contracting deliveries as cart-drivers and porters. The porters actually organized into groups to work together at the railroad station. A unique source of income for the suppliers and especially for the travelling Jewish peddlers was the army maneuvers that took place annually in the area. At the end of the 19th century and the early 20th century, Jews were among the organizers of industrial factories in Końskie. Jews owned two large factories for iron-products (Hochberg and Kronenblum) as well as a sawmill and a flour mill. These plants did not employ Jews, but in smaller workshops, such as a few foundries of brass that were owned by Jews, there were Jewish workers, sometimes as many as 15 people.

During the second half of the 18th century, the community had its own cemetery, a Chevra Kadisha [Burial Society], and other communal institutions. Testimony to the community's flourishing during that period was the synagogue that was built then. It is one of the most important models of wooden sanctuaries that Jews built in Poland. In 1905, it was renovated and parts made of stone were added to it, like the wall that separates the women's section and an additional wing on the ground floor.

The first rabbi in Końskie who is known to have served during the 1820s (his name is mentioned in 1827) was Rabbi Yekutiel, the student of HaHoze MiLublin [the "Seer of Lublin", 1745-1815]. After him, Rabbi Mendel (circa 1829) served the community and Rabbi Yehoshua from Kinsk. For a short time in the second half of the 19th century, the rabbi was Rabbi Moshe Yechiel HaLevi Staszewski. A well-known figure in the rabbinical circles was Rabbi Pinchas Rabinowicz, the great-grandson of "the Jew from Przysucha" [Rabbi Yaakov Yitzchak ben Asher, 1766-1814]. He used to gather many Hasidim, those from the vicinity and those from other places, and prophesized the possibility of the arrival of the Messiah "at any hour". After his death in 1901, his sons continued the tradition of the dynasty and one of them, Rabbi Natan David, ran the court in Końskie. In about 1896, Rabbi Yoav Yehoshua Weingarten, one of the great experts in Halacha (Jewish Law) and Torah in Poland, formerly rabbi of Lutomiersk and Gostynin, became the rabbi of Końskie. His rulings in Jewish Law were gathered in the book "Chelkat Yoav" – a commentary on the four parts of the Shulchan Aruch. Rabbi Yoav Yehoshua died in 1922.

The first Zionist groups in Końskie were organized towards the end of the 19th century and in the beginning of the 20th century. They managed their propaganda and their cultural activities under the umbrella of the "Tarbut" library that was founded then. The Bund cell was founded during the years 1905-6 and its members participated in revolutionary activities in the city, such as strikes and demonstrations. During World War I, the Bund organized a public kitchen, a cultural center, a library and a drama workshop. The cultural center had its own hall (the only one in Końskie) where shows and lectures were given.

Between the Two World Wars

At the end of the 19th century and the beginning of the 20th century, the main branches in the professional structure of the Jews in Końskie were small industry production and workshops. In 1921, there were 321 small industrial factories that employed 577 people, of which 62.2% were the owners and their households, and 37.8% were hired workers. Among these workers, 92.7% were Jews. A unique category among these factories were the brass plants (that during the wars increased in number to 20) and large carpentry workshops. Two additional factories were added to the two iron-products factories that Jews owned: "Neptune" (owned by Minc) and the factory owned by Piżyc. These plants did not employ Jews (except as temporary work for the pioneer trainees), but about thirty travelling agents and sales persons profited from them, as well as several Jewish clerks. A new sight in the Jewish industries was provided by a group of geese traders. They bought the geese in the area from the villagers and sold them in Łódź and Warsaw. Among the small group of intellectuals were 3 doctors, 3 dentists, 4 "ploczers" [barber-surgeons], 3 lawyers, and several teachers in the Jewish schools.

Between the wars, several social-economic organizations were founded and were quite active in Końskie: the merchants' union, the small-merchants' union, the artisan's union (with a charity foundation - "Gmilut Chasidim"). Four Jewish banks gave credit to merchants and artisans: the cooperative bank, the merchants' bank, the cooperative-credit bank, and a credit-bank (privately owned). All these banks were founded during the years 1920-1922. The shoemakers, the tailors, and independent Jewish butchers (the workshop owners) managed their traditional societies and synagogues. On the other hand, the workers in the factories and industrial workshops belonged to the professional and general unions in which Jews and non-Jews gathered. The socialist Polish party (P.P.S.), the Bund and the communist groups (among them some Jews) had a great deal of influence on the general professional union.

During the war, there were branches of all the Zionists party in Poland in Końskie, as well as youth-organizations that also ran "Hachszara" [pioneer training] groups of their own. The Zionist Left had a numerical majority, and then the General Zionists ("Al HaMiszmar" group). In the elections for the 1939 Zionist congress, there were 330 voters. Of these, 178 voted for the League for Laboring Israel, 110 for the General Zionists ("Al HaMiszmar"), 42 for HaMizrachi. In 1931, the Revisionists founded a group and a "Beitar" branch also opened. The Bund had great influence in Końskie and it worked especially with the general professional unions and with the city council. In these two areas, the Bund cooperated with the local P.P.S. group. Agudat Israel was founded in Końskie after World War I, and it worked in the community in education. Beside the basic foundation of Agudat Israel, which was Gur Hasidim, there were also Alexander Hasidim, Radomsk Hasidim, and others in Końskie.

The Zionists controlled the community management until the 30s, and they always elected the same chairman - Hochberg, the General Zionists representative. Afterwards, during 1931, the majority of the community supported Agudat Israel. In the city council, most of the Jewish mandates were in the hands of the Bund. In the 1936 elections, the Bund had 5 mandates out of the 6 given to the Jews, and Poaley Zion had the remaining one.

Beginning in 1922, the Końskie rabbi was the son of Rabbi Yoav Yehoshua, Rabbi Meir Weingarten. He was the last rabbi of the city and died during the Nazi occupation. Rabbi Ch. Rabinowicz, a descendant of Rabbi Pinchas', was also killed in the years of the occupation. Between the two wars, Rabbi Perl, a descendant of the great rabbis of Radoszyce, had settled in Końskie and ran his court there mostly for the poor people.

During that time, a few Jewish school were founded, too. The community founded a "Talmud Torah" [religious school]. In 1920, Agudat Israel had founded a Cheder "Yisudei Torah" [a primary school "Foundations of the Torah"], as well as a girls' school "Bet Yaakov". During the 20s the Zionists ran a school and a Hebrew nursery school. But most of the Jewish children studied in the seven grades of the public school (the "Szabasowka"), In 1928, a Yeshiva was founded with about 100 fellows, among them young men from other cities. The two libraries mentioned above, "Tarbut" of the Zionists and "Peretz Memorial" of the Bund – were the largest in Końskie in that period. There were also small libraries of the parties and the youth movements. In Minc's factory, there was for some time a Jewish orchestra. For a long period there were several sports organizations in the city: "HaMenazeach" [the victor], "Maccabi" (sponsored by the Zionists) and "Sztern" (sponsored by the Bund).

By the end of World War I, anti-Semitism began affecting the Jews. In 1919, there were Jews who were injured in a violent attack by General Haller's soldiers. With the excuse of a search for an arsenal, there were searches made in Jewish homes (including in the synagogue and the home of the community chairman) in which trade goods and valuables were confiscated and several people were beaten. During the 30s, the confiscating of Jewish trade continued and guards were put in front of Jewish stores – but there were also attempts to stir up more violent riots. In March of 1936, two of the local [anti-Semitic] leaders threw down a 'road-cross' and then blamed the Jews for this desecration. The police prevented violence. In July of 1937, in a market of the nearby villages Niadziela and Łopuszno, a group of thugs attacked the Jewish peddlers at the fair, turned their carts upside down, beat them and chased them away. In this case too, the police stopped the riots. In September of the same year, windows were broken in several Jewish houses, including the house of the Rebbe of Radoszyce, and one Jewish woman was injured.

The Holocaust

During the first years of the war most of the Jewish residents [of Końskie] fled to villages in the area out of fear of the bombings, mostly to nearby Przysucha. But there they met the Germans and therefore returned to Końskie. Some of the Jews had deserted the town with the arrival of the German army which immediately started to persecute the Jews. Many men (among them probably some Polish men) were imprisoned in the railroad workshops and 13 of them were murdered. The Germans also kidnapped a few dozens Jews (it was apparently on the 12th of September 1939) with the excuse that a German had been murdered near Końskie. The kidnapped people were ordered to dig a grave for the dead German and then to run. The Germans then shot the running people with rifles and killed some of them. The exact number of dead varies with the witness – from a few up to forty people. During these days, the synagogue was burned. Dr. Kahana, the community activist, Rabbi Weingarten and others were taken as hostages. They were released only after the Jews of Końskie paid a penalty tax.

The Judenrat that was organized by the order of the authorities changed its structure constantly. The chairman remained Josef Rosen who had been a municipal clerk before the war. The names of only two members of the Judenrat are known: Alter Sztark and Yechezkel Gotlieb. A Jewish police force was also organized with 30 people in it.

The stories about building a Ghetto in Końskie are varied. It is probable that the Ghetto was made by gradually displacing the Jews over a long period of time. However, in the spring of 1940, all of the Jewish residents lived in the Ghetto. It had two separate parts – one in the area of Nowy-Świat Street, and the other in the center of town, around Rzeidowska Street. Here are some of the street names that were included in the Ghetto: Jatkowa, the 3rd of May Street, Pocztowa, Krakowska, Joselewicz, and Rynek. The two parts of the Ghetto were open and not because they were unfenced. Polish landlords were allowed to live in both parts of the Ghetto. In such conditions, contact with the Poles, leaving the Ghetto illegally, and purchasing food on the “Aryan” side were not difficult at all and the German authorities did not pay much attention to it. Only from time to time were there Jews arrested for leaving the Ghetto without a pass. According to witnesses, the Ghetto was closed in the spring of 1941, but it is unclear what the signs of this closure were. From that time the connection of the two parts of the Ghetto was allowed in certain hours, under the supervision of Jewish policemen. Even so, the contact with “Aryans” was now not much more difficult, because Polish people continued living in the Ghetto. Even the setting of a death-penalty for Jews leaving the Ghetto illegally (ordered by the head of the Końskie district on the 10th of December 1941) did not have much affect on their isolation or living conditions because the death-penalty was never enforced. The German police released Jews who were caught outside the Ghetto with no license or ribbon, in exchange for for a bribe.

The Ghetto was overcrowded. In its narrow area were 7,500 people, among them about 2,000 refugees displaced from Łódź, Płock, Warsaw and other places (the Łódź people arrived during the years 1939-1940, 1,200 people of Płock arrived in February of 1941.) The Jews of Końskie viewed the arrival of the refugees with disfavor. The refugees caused an increase in the overcrowding and in living expenses and added large numbers of poor people in the course of the general impoverishment. The Judenrat operated a soup kitchen for the poor. We have accounts of an orphanage or a home for indigent children with 250 children who were served one meal a day. Some of the Jews supported themselves by selling their remaining property; others survived by smuggling; the workshop owners worked illegally for “Aryan” clients and even for the German authorities who needed Jewish experts (bakers, shoemakers and plumbers). Some Jews worked for the authorities in the municipal industrial plants, primarily iron foundries: in June of 1942, 420 Jewish expert workers were working at the foundries. The Jews also worked in agriculture in the local farms that had been turned over to the Germans. Two hundred young Jewish men worked at the largest of these farms, which belonged to a German named Veiting. The teams of Jewish workers who were employed in such places were brought to the plants every day under armed guard.

The Jews were terrorized by “hunts” to capture people for forced labor in the city and its environs, or to be sent to work camps. In one of these hunts, all of the young Jews were forced to show up, and most were sent to a work camp in Hrubieszów. But gradually the deportees filtered out and returned to Końskie – either by illegally leaving or by the demand of the German institutions in Końskie itself. The German authorities also terrorized the Ghetto inhabitants by frequently breaking into their homes and stealing their possessions.

The concentration of the Jews of the district into Końskie during the summer and fall of 1941 was the beginning of the extermination of the Jews in the area. With this concentration, the number of Jews in the Ghetto rose from 7,250 to 9,000 in October-November of 1942. Even during the extermination period itself, Jews were still being brought to the Końskie Ghetto from Radoszyce, Gowarczów and other places.

The liquidation of the Końskie Ghetto started in November of 1942, but there are conflicting reports regarding the various stages of the liquidation. One report is that in November there were two rounds of deportations, one right after the other (3-4th of November 1942 and 7-9th of November 1942), during which the majority of the inhabitants of the city and the area were sent to Treblinka. At the time of these deportations, several dozen Jews were killed on the spot. There is more detailed testimony about the second deportation. During the night, Polish, German, and Ukrainian policemen surrounded the Ghetto, and in the morning there were farmers' wagons lined up waiting near the Ghetto. The Jews were gathered into the Market Square and ordered to leave all their belongings there. All were brought to Szydłowiec, some on foot and some on wagons, all under guard, which was already Judenrein ("Jew free"). In Końskie only a group of young Jews, the workers of the Veiting farm, remained, as well as those who managed to hide inside the Ghetto or in the "Aryan" side. In Szydłowiec, there were also deportees from other places and all were housed in the ruined and abandoned buildings of a leather factory. The conditions were terrible: freezing temperature and total starvation, and indeed a typhus epidemic broke out. A heavy German guard surrounded the ruins and only a few Jews succeeded in escaping – with the help of Polish friends who had followed them to Szydłowiec. After a few days, the Jews were sent to Treblinka. The few Jews of Końskie who escaped joined the Veiting workers' group. After the second deportation, the Ghetto was officially exterminated. The Veiting workers were concentrated on the farm. In the next weeks, the German police brought Jews who had hidden and been caught to the farm or killed them. A number of Jews who had been hiding joined the legal workers on their own, and in this way several hundred people gathered on the farm, fifty people in a room. In this way, a kind of Jewish work camp was created from which workers were sent not only to agricultural work but also to destroy the cemetery, for loading and unloading at the train station and for similar work. After a while, some of these Jews were transferred into one of the large blocks of apartment buildings in the city. They were joined by a number of illegal Jews. After a short time, (probably on the 24th of November 1942) there was a selection of these Jews (the selectors were apparently Jewish policemen). On the order of the authorities, 70 young and strong men were chosen and sent to the work camp Hasag in Skarżysko-Kamienna. After this selection, there were about 700 Jews that remained in that block. The third (and last)

Action was in the 6-7th of January 1943. All of the Veiting workers were first transferred to the block and during the night, German policemen surrounded it. The next day, they were all taken to Szydłowiec where there was a "return-Ghetto" which was meant to tempt the Jews in the area to abandon their hiding places. On the 13th of January 1943, with the extermination of the Ghetto in Szydłowiec, all the Jews of Końskie, with about 5,000 Jews who had been gathered there, were sent to Treblinka. The police continued to hunt down Jews who were hiding in the old-Ghetto and on the "Aryan" side. The Jews who were found were shot on the spot or were sent in small groups to the "return-Ghetto" in Szydłowiec while it still existed. Many Poles then gave the Jews shelter and substantial help and thus saved a good number of them; worth mentioning especially are Henryk Stanislawski and his family. Several young Jews, who had escaped the deportations, fled to the forests and sought to join the Polish partisans, were murdered by these partisans. Among them: Szmuel Cweig, Nuta Zysman, Hersz Wroblewski. The shoemaker Hersz Wroblewski did much to help the Jews of Końskie during the occupation. Through his work for the German authorities, he succeeded in releasing many Jewish prisoners and arranged solutions for many other problems.

Of the Jews who lived in Końskie when the war broke out, about 200 survived it – most of them by hiding with Poles or with "Aryan" papers (mostly women and children). A few Jews, about 15, survived the Nazi camps. Sixty to seventy people returned from the Soviet Union. A few men reached Israel with the army of General Anders. After the war, a few Jewish families lived in Końskie for a while.

Końskie – 1929 Business Directory Entries

Transcribed by Warren Blatt

Transcribed below are the entries for Końskie from the 1929 Polish business directory Księga Adresowa Polski (Wraz z w.m. Gdańskiem) dla Handlu, Przemysłu Rzemiosł i Rolnictwa [Directory of Poland (including Gdańsk) for trade, industry, handicraft and agriculture], (Warszawa, 1929), from pages 231-232. For more information about this directory, see Kielce-Radom SIG Journal IV:1 (Winter 2000), pages 27-29.

We thank JRI-Poland for making these pages available to us. JRI-Poland is currently engaged in a project to transcribe this entire 3,000 page directory, and create a searchable online database. If you would like to help, please see their web pages at < <http://www.jewishgen.org/jri-pl/bizdir/start.htm> >.

The directory is organized by province, then by town, and then by occupation within each town. The occupations are listed alphabetically in Polish (except for the first few officials and medical/legal professions), with French translation following. I have added the English translation of each occupation. Street names or street addresses follow some names.

Bringing It all Back Home: The Journey to Zawichost

by Margie Newman

When I traveled to eastern Europe this past August, I wasn't sure that I would visit Zawichost, the town in southeastern Poland where my father's family had lived for hundreds of years. The main purpose of my trip, a journey to Vilnius, "Vilne" in Yiddish, the "Jerusalem of Lithuania", was a scholarly one. I told myself that the trip to my father's shtetl was a postscript, something that I'd choose to do or not do at the last moment once I'd completed the Yiddish language and cultural program in Vilnius, which I was on fellowship from the University of Minnesota to attend. When I booked my flight, I got a return ticket back to the U.S. from Vilnius instead of Poland. I didn't want to commit myself. I had a sense that if I went to Poland, I would never come back, that I would disappear, vanish, without even any violence being done to me.

My father, who immigrated to the United States in 1949 after surviving Skarżysko-Kamienna, HASAG Częstochowa and Buchenwald, couldn't understand my desire to travel to eastern Europe. He sees his greatest accomplishment not as surviving the camps, but as getting out of Poland so that his children and future generations could live freely.

He told me, as he had many times before, how he, who was born in 1915, had spent a good part of his life trying to escape Zawichost before the people of Poland had ever heard of Hitler. His stories were not nostalgic; they were about Passover blood libels, Easter Sunday pogroms, education withheld, opportunity denied, about a people so disparaged that they turned on themselves.

A classic story of my father's shtetl is this:

When my father was a young man of fourteen, he longed for a suit in the latest fashion, single-breasted, with lapels. My father's uncle in Vladivostok had sent the fabric for the family to have new clothes made for Passover. My father went to Reb Yaakov the Tailor, who took his measurements. My father described the suit that he wanted in detail; Reb Yaakov agreed. In synagogue that Shabbos, Reb Yaakov told my father's father about my father's crazy plan. My father's father told him to make the suit however he, Reb Yaakov, thought proper. My father spent the next few weeks looking forward to and bragging about his stylish new suit.

When my father went to Reb Yaakov's house to pick up the suit, his eyes went straight to the buttons. There he saw them, two rows of buttons, going all the way up to the neck and no lapels to be seen.

My father organized his friends to help him take his revenge. When Reb Yaakov was in synagogue on Shabbos, the boys ran about and took sand, rocks, dirty straw, horse droppings, any filth from the streets that they could gather. Then, while the other boys stood lookout, my father stuffed the sleeve of Reb Yaakov's coat, hanging on pegs with all the other men's coats, full of the garbage and tied a knot at the bottom of it.

I wanted to see the streets where those boys ran, the synagogue, the pegs where these coats hung. I sat down with my father before my trip to gather information about Zawichost. I drew out a rough map of the town, with the two synagogues, the beys medrash, the kheyder, and the market where cows stood, tied to wagons, chewing their cud, where farmers stood with potatoes, chickens, berries in the summertime, yellow kasha from a farmer from Kolbuszów.

I plotted out on paper the landmarks of the stories that had come to seem like folktales to me, having heard them from my father so many times since my childhood, with their ritualized telling and bizarre characters. I had done some other research as well, speaking with people who'd traveled to Poland in the recent past. I put out a request on the Second Generation list-serve that I belonged to. I met Marilyn, with whom I've since developed a friendship, at the office of the Polish National Tourist Office on Madison Avenue in New York. She'd traveled to Poland twice in the past several years.

The young man behind the counter spoke perfect English with a slight accent. He was polite and formal, almost courtly in a detached manner. He asked how he could help us.

"We...we're Jews," I said.

"What exactly can I do for you?" he asked.

I asked him about trains that went from Kraków to Zawichost, and from Zawichost to Belzec, the death camp near the Ukrainian border where my father's family was murdered along with almost every other Jew from Zawichost and the neighboring town of Sandomierz, on October 29, 1942.

He checked his computer and said that there were no trains for either of those routes, but that he had many interesting booklets that he could give me. I had an impulse that I am not proud of, a desire to bait this innocent man. His crime was nothing more than handing out glossy tourist brochures with names like "Destination Poland!" and a map with the heading "Jewish Poland", the key consisting of a dancing khosid, a Star of David, a guard tower and a skull and crossbones, representing respectively, historical centers of Chasidism, synagogues that are still standing, concentration camps and death camps. He gave me these in a white plastic bag whimsically decorated with bright colors that said "Polska" on it. I laughed at the bag, the design of it seeming incongruous for a trip to go chase ghosts. My friend told me that she'd saved her plastic bag and uses it for garbage.

"Well, there certainly WERE trains going to Belzec," I said.

Marilyn said, "Yes, as we know, they had trains going all over...."

I recognized this same baiting impulse in her, the same one that I've seen with many children of survivors from Poland. Much of these survivor's hatred, for many and complex reasons, rightly or wrongly is directed against the Poles as much as, or even more than the Germans.

I also connected with some people through the Kielce-Radom Special Interest Group. They'd had positive experiences, and didn't experience any incidents of anti-Semitism on their trips. They offered helpful recommendations on benefits of researching as much as possible before the trip, and suggested places to stay in Kraków.

Kraków

I stayed at the Klezmer-Hois Hotel in the Kazimierz district. Kazimierz is described by some as the center of Jewish revival in Poland. To me it seemed surreal and slightly obscene, like a macabre post-Shoah Jewish Disneyworld.

"Come! Buy a wooden figurine of Zeydie!" The hotel was clean and reasonably priced. The restaurant had some tasty offerings, and the café had delicious poppy-seed homentashn available at all times sitting on a plate on top of the cash register. The staff, mainly young people, students in their twenties, were helpful and gracious. Most of them spoke English. The "Jewish flavor" atmosphere unnerved me. There were paintings of sad-eyed rabbis and tapes of klezmer music playing incessantly, but the only Jews besides a handful who were involved in the tourist business in Kazimierz, most of whom described themselves as "having Jewish heritage", were there from abroad, visiting graves if their ancestors were lucky, visiting Auschwitz or Belzec if they were not.

Choosing what I'd wear for the visit to my father's hometown was a conundrum. I wanted to look prosperous, as though my people had done well. I was afraid of looking prosperous, afraid of reinforcing stereotypes of the rich Jew. In the end I decided to dress as though I was going to visit relatives in another country that I was meeting for the first time. After all, in a sense that's what I was doing.

Driving the 180 kilometers northeast from Kraków to Zawichost with the translator and driver I'd hired, I was struck by the placid loveliness of the fields. There were long, narrow rows of cabbages and corn. Tobacco leaves lay stacked on wooden frames, drying in the late summer breeze, their rich brown color strangely beautiful. Tomato vines hung heavy with their red fruit. Many crops had already been harvested, and there were some small field fires to burn off the remaining stubble of the crops to prepare for the next growing season. The green fields were spotted with patches of Queen Anne's lace and purple clover. The cottages were made of wood, some of stone, or white stucco, most with red tile roofs, some with roofs of wood or metal. Almost every house had a small, simply made greenhouse made of wood with plastic covering it. The cottages were simple, tidy, pleasing, giving a general impression of neatness and thrift. The haystacks were as beautiful as Monet's, mounded on triangular wooden frames. There were many elderly people working in the fields, slowly harvesting by hand, picking cabbages. It was the end of August, but it was already starting to get cool. Many of the houses had a cow and some chickens in the front yard, and most of the houses had flower gardens and fruit trees bearing apples and silvery plums.

Zawichost

The first stop upon arriving in Zawichost was the Town Hall. While doing some research on the JRI-Poland website on JewishGen, I'd found an entry that indicated that there were vital records of my father's family. There was a woman at the desk in the office. The translator asked her to look for the birth records. I wrote down the names for her; Kopl Najman, my father's father, my father's maternal uncle, Szmul Najman, and my father's grandfather Dawid Najman. There would have been something satisfying about having these records in my hand, though I didn't need them for any specific purpose; I wasn't doing any serious genealogical work. The woman at the desk said that it was not her regular job, that she didn't have time to do it, because the person who usually did that job was out for the day. I'd been told by several people who'd traveled to Poland that bribery is commonly the only way that one can access records. I was perfectly willing to do so. I asked the translator to offer her a bribe. He was reluctant. She said that she would try to look; we said we would return later.

My next task was to try to find the house that my father grew up in, where his family had lived for centuries, with the same bedstead, the same copper pots hanging on the walls. The street was named Ostrowska Street, but was more often called by its nickname, Hintsgesl, or "Dog's Street" in Yiddish. He'd told me that he was sure that the house was still standing; it was made of stone, and he and his brother had just finished putting a new roof on it when the Nazis invaded Poland.

My father had never been back, not even after the Liberation. The last time he had been there was in early 1941, when he traveled by horse and wagon, from Ćmielów, where he had been captured for slave labor. My father had been provided with a pair of boots. He brought these to his mother in Zawichost. This was the last time he saw his parents. At that time, before Russia entered into the war, it was still possible for Jews to travel on a very limited basis. He didn't return to Zawichost to search for his family after he was liberated from Buchenwald. He'd met someone from his town who had escaped from the cattle car headed to Belzec. He told my father that he was in the car with my father's parents, his sisters. He told my father that they were dead, or half dead, on the train.

The people in the town looked old. I was looking for old people, who might remember my family, but I soon realized that people looked much older for their years than I was used to seeing. My father was sure that people would remember his grandfather who was a well-known man in Zawichost. He had worked for many years for the steamship company that sailed the Vistula from Sandomierz to Danzig, carrying leather, sugar, raisins and nuts, receiving and storing the goods if the merchants couldn't pay for them right away. My father described him as known for his honesty and natural mathematical ability.

There was an old woman, in her late 70s, but she looked older. The translator asked her if she knew my family. She answered that she didn't know them, but her husband, a few years older than she, might know. She went to the back of her house to look for him. Her house was a lovely wooden cottage, painted white with the red roof made of rounded ceramic tiles that were common in the region. There was a small front room, a porch, with a white lace curtain. It was clean and white, with a garden of black-eyed Susans, hollyhocks and marigolds growing on the side of the house. The aesthetic was like that I'd seen in the fields, simple lines, clean, orderly, carefully arranged. She said that he might come back soon or later, he might be at the bar or visiting a neighbor. Then she tightened her kerchief on her head and said, "Follow me" and led us about half a mile to the site of the Jewish cemetery. She didn't ask us if we wanted to go there. She just knew that this was the place we needed to see.

On the way we passed a group of three women on the corner. They were younger than the woman who was helping us; they could have been anywhere from their late 40's to their 60's. They stared at us, at first trying to smile, but giving up the attempt rather quickly.

They were speaking rapidly to the older woman, and their tone sounded agitated. One of the women kept staring down at my shoes. They had cost twelve dollars at PayLess in Brooklyn, but by local standards they must have seemed elegant. They looked like ballet slippers, black, with a velvety texture. The scene in Jerzy Kosinski's Painted Bird, where the little boy, the story's protagonist, is lying on the railroad tracks and the treacherous Poles come and steal the shoes off his feet kept running through my mind.

I asked my translator to tell me what they were talking about.

He said, "They're telling her not to help you."

She seemed unmoved by their words. She tied her kerchief tighter around her head and kept walking. She explained through the translator that the path we were walking on was the site of the Jewish ghetto during the war. There were houses still standing though they were in disrepair, shabbier than the houses on the other streets. I was surprised that there still was a cemetery. My father had told me that someone had told him that there had been a railroad station built through it. The cemetery was weedy and unkempt. There were no gravestones except for one "symbolic" one. It was beautifully carved, with an open prayer book in relief, and Hebrew text engraved. Next to this stone, there was a small concrete monument with a seven-branched menorah on the face. On top was a metal Star of David, painted blue. On the sides of the monument there were some names engraved. The woman told us that several years ago, people from all over the world had come to dedicate the monument, and that it had been vandalized, with part of it broken off and stolen, and graffiti, which was still clearly visible, consisting of stick figures on the stone. I said Kaddish (I'd brought a laminated pocket-sized card with the Mourner's Kaddish on it along from home; it turned out to be a remarkably useful accessory!) and lit a yohrtzayt candle. It was remarkably moving to be able to say Kaddish in this place, where so many generations of my family were buried. I thanked the woman for helping me pray at the grave of my ancestors. She looked at me and simply said, "I did what I could."

We walked back and I asked her if she knew where a certain Polish family, the Skuras, lived. These were my father's neighbors, and he thought that the children might still be alive if the parents were not. She walked us a short distance to a house that she thought used to be owned by the Skuras, but said that the parents and two of the children had died, and the youngest daughter had moved away to another town.

My interpreter and I were looking at the house when a woman came from inside. She looked to be in her mid-fifties. The interpreter told her that I was visiting from America and asked her if she knew the Skuras. Immediately she started shrieking and crossing herself. My interpreter said she was saying "Dear Jesus, I don't know anything, I swear. Kill me if I know anything!" Her husband came outside at the sound of the commotion. He remained deadpan, but the woman kept screaming. She must have thought that I was trying to reclaim property. I told the translator to tell her not to worry; that this wasn't our family house. He explained this to her, but it didn't calm her. The scene started to seem comic to me; the high drama of it, the woman calling to Jesus insisting that "she didn't know anything" when no one suggested that there was anything that she might know. We walked away to the sounds of her frantic yelling.

We then walked to the banks of the Vistula, which was calm and lovely. There were men fishing on piers. I remembered my father telling me about how his father fished on these banks, his skin turning dark brown from long days trying to catch fish to eat and some to sell. There was a very small ferry that traveled to the other side of the river, which in pre-World War I days was part of the Austrian Empire. I imagined Jewish boys and girls skating there in the summer, and imagined the steamship coming, bearing delicacies for yom-tov baking and fabric for new clothes.

Then we stopped back at the Town Hall. Not surprisingly, the woman said that she didn't have time to look for the records. She offered to give me a certificate saying that my father had been born in Zawichost, but I wasn't interested. She tried to sell me a book on the history of Zawichost, but I wasn't interested in that either. I felt like I had seen what I needed to see. The two synagogues no longer stood; the buildings had been sold. I couldn't find my father's old house. He hadn't been sure of the address. Perhaps it no longer stood either. I couldn't be sure. I'd asked a few more elderly people if they remembered my family. They all answered in the same manner: yes, there had been Jews here, but they didn't know one from the other. It was like two separate towns.

Sandomierz

We stopped at Sandomierz, a famous and beautiful medieval city near Zawichost. We visited the Cathedral there. I was surprised, but not shocked, to see a large painting portraying stereotypically sinister looking Jews taking blood from the bodies of plump babies. My translator told me that this had been commissioned in the 1600s, when a local Jewish leader had been accused of blood libel. I took photos. Several people in the Cathedral told me to stop taking photos; it wasn't allowed. I didn't care, and wasn't particularly concerned about the light from the flash damaging the painting's surface.

Painting in Cathedral at Sandomierz

Belzec

Two days later, I visited Belzec with the help of a wonderful interpreter, Lech, who owns a bookstore next to the Klezmer-Hois Hotel. It was a three-hour drive. Lech, well versed in history and strongly interested in Jewish history (one of his grandfathers was Jewish) tried to fill me in on the history of Belzec. I didn't want to hear it until we were very close; I felt extremely emotional and wanted to avoid talking about it until I could no longer avoid it. When we drove into the very small town of Belzec, the first thing I saw was a brightly colored sign that said "Belzec Disco."

There was nothing left of the camp itself. Everything had been destroyed by the Nazis before the end of the war. A large part of the space was planted over with low-growing, pinkish white plants. There was a monument consisting of a sculpture of two emaciated figures, one cradling the other. Someone had taken paper flowers from a memorial wreath made of paper flowers and put a flower in the crotch of one of the figures. There were many Yohrtsayt candles on the steps of the monument and lying on the nearby grass. I picked up trash that was lying on the grounds, mainly wrappers and pop and beer bottles and cans. A few couples passed through the grounds with packages in their hands, talking and laughing. It looked like they were on their way home from doing some shopping. I smiled at them. They didn't smile back.

Lech told me the story of Belzec.

At Belzec, everything was done at top speed so that people would be disoriented, discouraging resistance. People were driven out of the cattle cars with whips and dogs by the Ukrainian guards. Often, they were in the cattle cars for days. There were only two known survivors. Most of the testimony about Belzec comes from SS officers. Men were forced to one undressing room, women and children to the other. They were forced to undress, and exhorted to breathe deeply in what they were told were the disinfection showers so that they would be clean before they were sent off to resettlement. There were flowerpots in front of this place, which was the gas chamber.

The clothing and valuables were taken from the undressing rooms, and sent back in trains to Germany. The bodies from the gas chamber were searched for hidden jewelry and gold teeth were extracted.

When my father was in Buchenwald, a new arrival came from a transport wearing a coat that my father recognized as his father's. There was a patch on the collar that my father had sewn on it himself with yellow thread.

He asked the new arrival for the coat, and offered half his daily bread ration for it. The new arrival held out for the whole ration, but my father couldn't make the trade. He knew he would die if he did so.

I walked to where the mass graves stood, set off, by five large concrete markers. I sat on the ground with a spade that Lech had brought along at my request. He'd kindly offered to dig for me, but I felt that I had to do it myself. I was taking soil home to bury in the Zawichost Landsmanschaft plot in Long Island, New York. I filled a small plastic bag, and cried. I took a few minutes time and reflected on the life of each member of my family that met their death there: my father's parents' Kopl and Perl Najman (Mirels), my father's sister Rukhl, her husband Yosl Fenekl, their baby Hershl and my father's sister Leah.

Then I lit a yohrtsayt candle.

On the way back from Belzec we stopped at an inn. Lech told me that it probably used to be owned by Jews, that Jews had the licenses for inns. I was hungry again, feeling like I needed sustenance. I had the reflexive feeling of guilt that I'd usurped from my father. How could I eat and enjoy when my family had starved? There was a family, dressed nicely, celebrating something. Inside were balloons and streamers. One of the families was speaking English; I thought that they were visiting from America.

Lech saw me looking at the family. I think he knew what I was feeling; envy that this family could come together with its various branches intact. That a visit to Poland could be something other than a journey to the death camps to say Kaddish, and to seek out Jewish ruins. We both ate pierogies and drank a l'chaim. And though a thousand dark jokes passed through my mind ("I kept my family waiting in a Ziploc bag in the car while I stopped for dinner", etc.) it was a momentous time for me. I had traveled to this town on the southeastern border of Poland. I had said Kaddish, lit yohrtsayt candles, made what order I could in the cemetery, brought back a few handfuls of earth from where they lay – scholars and thieves, seamstresses and water carriers, rabbis and shoemakers, the "rich" Jews of the town who had two chickens strutting in their front yard and the poor Jews who'd utter curses for the chickens to die, geniuses and fools – earth from the spot where they lived the final hours of their lives.

One person that I'd spoken to had warned me against hoping for a sense of closure to come from the trip. I'd laughed when he said that, thinking that that was the last thing I'd expected. It was a journey to chase ghosts, I'd thought, and I'd thought that the trip would open a wellspring of psychic tures that I'd never even explored.

I'd seen the town, seen that there was nothing remaining of my family, or my people. There was no one who remembered my family. There was no synagogue, no gravestones, except for the one. There was the monument in the Jewish cemetery, but that had already been desecrated and I fully believed that it would be further desecrated, if not destroyed.

What remained was the river, the orchards, the fields. That universe that was Jewish Poland, that world of glorious learning, that oppressive world of ignorance, the world of warmth, rich communal bonds and of self-hatred no longer exists.

In Belzec, I walked the path that my family had walked, and imagining deeply, how it must have felt, to walk that path, under that sky, in the cold of late October. And though I knew that it could never compare, that no matter how deep my imaginings in my comfort and freedom, could not touch their experience, I felt as though I had honored their memory by coming to this place.

The thing that I'd least expected to happen, did happen. I did feel a sense of closure. I'd visited the shtetl. I'd seen the well in the town square where my ancestors had drawn water. I'd said Kaddish at the cemetery where generations were buried, and though there were no tombstones, I knew this was the site where they lay. I went to the place where they spent their final hours and I dug up a few spadefuls of earth from the mass grave, to bury in Jewish holy ground. I had paid my respects, and I had provided witness. They were not forgotten. I went back to take them home.

Restoration of the Jewish Cemetery of Ożarów, Poland – Part 2

Norman L. Weinberg, 95 Chasewood Lane, East Amherst, NY 14051

Mark Milgrom, 28960 Lake Park Drive, Farmington Hills, MI 48331

Marek Lipsztajn, 3 Shadetree Crescent, Toronto, Ontario M9C 1W9

Part 1 (see Kielce-Radom SIG Journal, V:4) described the objectives of the Ożarów Cemetery Restoration Project (OCRP), the OCRP team, fund raising, the plan, and making the necessary connections with the mayor and priest of Ożarów, the US Commission for the Preservation of America's Heritage Abroad, the Jewish Historical Institute in Warsaw and with Rabbi Michael Schudrich, Chief Rabbi of Warsaw and Lodz. Poland's local and state approvals would be needed as well as approvals of the Jewish Community of Poland. The plan would include selecting and negotiating terms with all the contractors, cemetery cleanup, resetting of fallen stones on secure bases, rebuilding the wall of the same stone from the local quarry used for the cemetery, return of monuments taken by the Germans for fortifications against the Russians, lying in a field about 10 miles away, and the design and construction of gates for the wall, a commemorative monument to the victims of the Holocaust, including those murdered by the Nazis and buried in a mass grave, and a multilingual plaque at the entrance way describing the significance of this site. The deadline for completion of the first phase of the restoration work was set as October 15, 2001, in time for a dedication ceremony at the cemetery. From start to finish, the timing would be about five months from the raising the necessary funds.

Thanks to the efforts of our project coordinator in Poland, Andrzej Omasta, an accomplished silversmith by trade, we quickly got all the necessary permits, hired the contractors and proceeded with the work about the beginning of July. The first surprise on the cemetery clean up was the discovery of many monuments buried under more than 60 years of debris and overgrowth. Among these was a beautiful monument of Moishe Aron Safir, the grandfather of Moishe Gold, our Canadian project liaison person. Together with the monuments returned from the farmer's field 10 miles away, the total rose to about 190. Among these monuments was the stone of one revered Rabbi of Ożarów, Rabbi Arye Epstein, confirming that these monuments were indeed from the Ożarów cemetery. Sadly, of the more than one thousand Jewish cemeteries in Poland before the war, very few remain intact today and still fewer have any monuments.

Phase 1 of the project soon expanded to include professional filming of a documentary of the OCRP. The documentary would be offered to Holocaust museums, shown to visitors, especially youth groups, and placed on the internet. We believe it also will provide valuable resource information for the news media, historians and those wanting to restore their ancestral cemeteries. A crew was hired in Poland to film the cemetery before and after, interview the mayor, the priest, Rabbi Schudrich, Andrzej Omasta and many others. Additional filming was done in Buffalo, NY and in Toronto, Canada to document the stories of Ożarówers and their descendants. The documentary should be ready some time next year.

The construction work began about mid-August and we were again surprised and delighted that two monuments dating from the early 1700's were found near the old wall. Up until that point, the earliest remaining monuments were from the late 1800's. It has been suggested by Dr. Eleanora Bergman of the Jewish Historical Institute that the Ożarów cemetery, like others in Poland, may have been built in layers as it filled, because of the limited burial space allowed Jews.

On Oct. 14, the day before our visit to Ożarów, our international tour group assembled together, many for the first time, for dinner at the Kahal, which is located next to the Warsaw Synagogue. OCRP coordinators who had never met one another before embraced at last in the joy of the moment, that so much had been accomplished in such a short time. There we also met the mayor of Ożarów, Marcin Majcher; Rabbi Michael Schudrich; Monica Krajewska, an expert and author on Jewish cemeteries in Poland; and Juliusz Wendlandt, a government official who twenty years earlier had the foresight to arrange that the Ożarów cemetery be listed as a historical site, an act that likely greatly helped in its subsequent preservation.

October 15th was a very special and emotional day for all of us. Together with a bus load of 25 Ożarówers and their descendants, including Rabbi Tanchum Becker (the Ożarówer Rebbe, living in Israel), and Colonel Rabbi David Zalis, a US military chaplain in full military dress, we traveled from Warsaw to Ożarów, about a three hour drive. We were expecting to meet the mayor along with other members of local and town government, the priest, representatives from the US and Canadian embassies, contractors and some townspeople, perhaps a dozen or two dozen people. As we approached Ożarów at noon on this warm and sunny day, we were greeted outside the cemetery gates by over 500 people! At a microphone, we were welcomed by the mayor and the priest, Father Stanislaw Szczerek. Letters were read from the President of Poland, Aleksander Kwasniewski and the Israeli Ambassador, Shevach Weiss. John Armstrong of the US Embassy in Warsaw greeted everyone and he read a letter of congratulations on the success of the project from Warren Miller, Chairman of the US

Touring the renovated cemetery

Commission for the Preservation of America's Heritage Abroad. Judy McLennan, wife of and representing the Canadian Ambassador, gave greetings and congratulations on behalf of the Canadian government. Rabbi Becker and Father Szczerek shook hands and each spoke about the importance of this occasion.

There were no signs of antisemitism. Indeed, we felt an atmosphere of mutual respect, reconciliation, and friendship. (There were no evident displays of antisemitism during the eight day tour that we took of Jewish Historical Sites in Poland. And the group of rabbis who left our group part way to do their own tour, likewise found no antisemitism. Certainly this exists as it does everywhere that Jews live and travel. We suppose that the years since the war has left a younger generation of Poles with much greater tolerance. Pope John Paul's urging of Poles for reconciliation and forgiveness for the fostering of antisemitism in the past may have also helped.)

The gates were opened after the speeches and we entered followed by the crowd. The gates bear the a metal plaque in five languages, with the engraved inscription:

This cemetery, noted for its beautifully carved monuments, dates back more than 350 years. It remains an eternal memorial to the Jewish community of Ożarów that had once thrived here. The Jews of Ożarów were deported by the Nazis in October 1942, to perish in the flames of the Holocaust. Some 120 of those martyrs lie buried here in a mass grave. In 2001, a worldwide group of Jews, both Ożarówers and their descendants, in cooperation with the people of Ożarów, and many others, initiated the restoration of this cemetery and made plans for its future maintenance. It is our hope that your visit to this remarkable place will provide you with a glimpse into the deep religious and cultural heritage of the Jews of Ożarów, a heritage that lives on and will continue to live throughout time. We gratefully acknowledge the generous contributions toward the financing of this project, as well as the time and energy devoted by so many from around the world, that have made this important restoration possible.

Ożarów Cemetery Restoration Project: Tishrei 5762-October 2001

As we reassembled in front of the commemorative monument at the edge of the mass grave, people from the town placed bouquets of flowers at the monument, standing on the edge of the mass grave. Father Szczerek and Rabbi Becker read the moving lament of the 79th Psalm in Polish and in Hebrew, respectively, referring to the aftermath of the destruction of the First Temple and the many Jews slaughtered with no one to bury them.

The inscription on the monument in Hebrew and English reads:

Their blood has been spilled as water...and alas not buried.
Psalm 79:3

In Sacred memory of the Jewish martyrs of Ożarów and surrounding communities who sanctified the Holy Name of The Almighty in life and in death, and who tragically perished in the flames of the Holocaust. May their hallowed lives be for all generations to come a beacon of light, strength and inspiration.
Dedicated Tishrei 5762-Oct. 2001

During inspection of the wonderful work on the cemetery, which was done with great care and creativity by the local workers and construction crew, several of us were met by townspeople. They had stories to tell of the prewar years and the terrible atrocities committed by the Nazis and their henchmen in Ożarów during the war. They showed lists of Jewish friends they had known or went to school with, wondering if any were still alive. And there were stories of Jews hidden by the townspeople, who converted to save their lives. We also learned of a Righteous Pole, Mr. Jan Jasinski who had personally hidden a Jew, at the risk of the lives of him and his family. There were many children present too, who happily crowded around Moishe Gold later as he distributed Canadian flag pins.

Afterwards, our tour group was led to the town's Cultural Center, and a thoughtfully prepared room containing prewar and wartime photographs of Jewish content, as well as paintings by artists from Ożarów and the vicinity. More speeches and presentations followed. We also had a chance to tour the former synagogue where a prayer was said by Rabbi Becker. We would like to restore the synagogue to something more appropriate than a plumbing warehouse, maybe as a religious museum and meeting place, especially for touring groups and visitors to Ożarów.

During our visit to Ożarów, we met the quarry owner, Henryk Dabrowski. He told us that his father spoke Yiddish and knew Hebrew, and had carved many monuments in Hebrew before the war. Very meaningfully, each of our tour group received a valuable souvenir: a hand crafted silver mezuzah created by the talented Andrzej Omasta, embellished with beautifully carved stone from that very same quarry. Andrzej Omasta had not only become an expert on Jewish cemetery restoration in Poland but a designer of exquisitely beautiful mezuzot. He had done neither just five months earlier!

We left Ożarów satisfied that we had accomplished our major objectives and in so doing, we did much more than we could have imagined... including an important step towards reconciliation between peoples. We were leaving behind a lasting memorial to the heritage of our ancestors and their way of life in that small shtetl. We had restored as best we could this place of remembrance and for teaching future generations.

Perhaps, important to all of us on this project is that we, the children, did return. And we spoke for the dead and for those murdered in the Holocaust.

The vital record extracts for this issue are the 1860-1884 marriages for Końskie, prepared by Dolores Lee Ring; and the 1866-1877 Iłża births, prepared by David Price. This data has been extracted from the civil registration books in possession of the Polish State Archives, and microfilmed by the Church of Jesus Christ Latter-day Saints (LDS). These extractions include information derived directly from the original registrations on the following LDS microfilms:

#0,716,607 Końskie 1860-1865
 #1,192,421 Końskie 1866-1868
 #1,192,422 Końskie 1869-1874, 1877
 #1,808,866 Końskie 1878-1880

 #1,201,346 Iłża 1877

There are additional microfilmed records available for both Końskie and Iłża.

Końskie

Końskie (known as “Kinsk” in Yiddish) was the district town (the county seat) of Końskie powiat, in western Radom gubernia. The town of Końskie’s Jewish population in 1897 was 4,453, and in 1931 it was 5,037. Końskie is a “new” town for us, for which we have not previously published any extracts. We have previously published extracts for other towns in Końskie district: Przedbórz and Radoszyce.

Here we present the 601 Jewish marriages recorded for 1860-1884. The original records are in Polish though 1867, and are thereafter in Russian. The Końskie marriages include marriage partners from many other area towns, notably Gowarczów, Opoczno, Przedbórz, Przysucha, Radoszyce, Szydłowiec, and some towns in neighboring Piotrków gubernia.

The records for 1875-1876 are not on the LDS microfilms, but do exist at the Polish State Archives in Kielce, according to the PSA’s inventories.

Iłża

Iłża (known as “Drilch” in Yiddish) was the district town (the county seat) of Iłża powiat, in eastern Radom gubernia. The town of Iłża’s Jewish population in 1897 was 2,069, and in 1931 it was 1,545.

This issue contains extracts of the 1,257 Jewish births recorded in Iłża between 1866 and 1877. The Jewish vital records registers of Iłża for this period also contain registrations from several surrounding towns, such as Wierzbnik, Wąchock, and Starachowice, as well as many small villages in the area.

Jewish vital records for Iłża from 1810 until 1825 were recorded in the Roman Catholic civil registry of Iłża. From 1825 until 1850, the Jewish records for Iłża can be found in the Sienno Jewish register.

The Kielce-Radom SIG Journal has previously published extracts of the 1850-1865 Iłża Jewish births, in III:1 (Winter 1999), pages 21-36.

Caution

These extracts are intended to assist the researcher in selecting records that may be of use for further study. There may be errors in interpretation in these extracts, due to the uneven quality of legibility of the handwriting, the microfilming, and the condition of the microfilm itself, in addition to errors in the original record books. As always, it is prudent for the researcher, when using secondary source data such as these extracts, to examine the primary source data for final verification. It is always best for the genealogist to view the actual records pertaining to his/her family to verify the interpretation, and glean additional facts.
